Troops mass in Polish strike

Gdansk unrest spreads despite gov't appeals

Times News Services

GDANSK — The Polish government is massing troops on the outskirts of strike-paralysed Gdansk today to counter the unrest that has spread to some 200 factories and shipyards in the vital Baltic industrial region.

The workers pressed ahead with their campaign despite reports that troops were being prepared against them. However, Lech Walesa, leader of the strike committee, said the strikers wanted to reopen talks with the government and their demands were "of course" subject to concessions by the workers, once the talks began.

Walesa said the strikers would insist the government recognize the strike committee as the bargaining agent for all of the more than 100,000 striking workers.

The strikers seemed unconcerned about reports that large forces of troops had been brought to the outskirts of Gdansk, where riots 10 years ago brought down the government. None of the workers dispatched on routine missions from strike headquarters in the Lenin Shipyards reported seeing any unusual concentration of troops.

Asked if he would order preparations in the event of any military move against the strikers, strike leader Walesa said, "I don't believe in violence."

Poland's President Henryk Jablonski was in Gdansk heading a group of top-level officials meeting to consider the strikers demands, a sweeping 25-point list of political reforms, wage increases and other economic benefits.

Despite Jablonski's plea for "all honest workers" to oppose the leaders of the strike, the number of factories and shipyards joining the walkout grew to 170, and 24 more groups of workers waited to register with the joint strike committee as the work stoppage spread to five more towns in the region.

Gdansk radio broadcast official warnings that the situation in the Baltic province had reached "worrying proportions." A navy commander, the provincial trade union chief and the head of the provinces food co-operative said they felt law and order in the region had broken down.

Although the workers were talking of possible modifications of their demands, they said they were not reacting to Communist Party leader Edward Gierek's emotional appeal for all workers to return to their jobs.

Dissident sources Monday reported that coal miners at three large mines in Silesia, Poland's other major industrial area in the centre of the nation, had formed strike committees.

The strikes started after the government raised the price of meat by 40 to 60 per cent on July 1.

The workers' latest 25 demands, which the strikers approved early Monday, were a combination of economic requests and demands for far-reaching political reforms, including freedom of speech and religion. One of the workers' requests last week was freedom to join their own unions.

Behind the political demands being made by Polish strikers that threaten traditional Communist forms of control lie economic problems with no solution in sight.

Poland has been living beyond its economic means for years. It is now so deeply in debt to foreign banks that it cannot borrow enough to modernize its economy and thus have some hope of economic growth. But workers refuse to accept the bitter medicine of reduced living standards while basic reforms are made.

No evidence nitrites cause cancer: study

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government said today that based on an extensive review of scientific evidence there is no need to order a ban on sodium nitrite as a food additive on grounds it may cause cancer.

Nitrite, used as a preservative in bacon, ham and many other meat and poultry products, was cited in a 1978 study by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a possible cause of cancer, based on tests among 2,000 laboratory rats.

In a joint statement, the Food and Drug Administration and the agriculture department said the MIT study was reviewed by a group of independent pathologists who found "a much lower incidence" of lymph cancers among laboratory rats than was originally reported.

The statement was attributed to Jere Goyan, FDA commissioner, and Carol Tucker Foreman, an assistant secretary of agriculture who oversees food and consumer services in USDA.

Meat industry officials, farm groups and others have questioned methods used in the MIT study and have pressured the government not to ban nitrite until further evidence could be reviewed.

C. Manly Molpus, president of the American Meat Institute, hailed the findings "as no surprise" among those who have critizied the 1978 MIT report, including the Council on Agricultural Science and Technology, members of Congress, the U.S. General Accounting Office and the Library of Congress.

Molpus, whose organization is financed by the meat industry, said: "The American consumer is the real beneficiary" of the government's announcement on nitrite.

The MIT study was conducted by Paul Newberne, a leading expert in the field of nutrition-induced disease, under contract with the FDA.

After Newberne's report was released, the FDA and the agriculture department "reached the tentative conclusion that nitrite might cause cancer" and considered steps that would lead to its ban as a food additive.

The government agencies, under pressure from farm groups and others who were skeptical of the MIT study, also set up a review process to go over the scientific information and come up with a determination.

Further, it said, a committee of scientists from federal agencies — including the FDA, the agriculture department, the National Cancer Institute and the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences — reviewed the pathologists' findings.

The committee "concluded that insufficient evidence exists to support a conclusion that nitrite induced cancer in the rats, based on the MIT study," said the statement.

However, it said federal agencies will continue efforts to eliminate "preformed nitrosamines" from foods. Those are chemicals formed when nitrite combines with naturally-occurring substances known as amines.

Unions target imported beer

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. beer shortage will become a full-scale drought following announcement Monday that locked-out brewery workers and their trade union allies will block shipments of imported suds in an effort to force a new contract settlement.

The move, to take effect at midnight Thursday, is designed by union officials to apply pressure on provincial Labor Minister Jack Heinrich for an end to a lockout of 1,200 employees by B.C.'s three major breweries.

The Brewery, Winery and Distillery Workers' Union has asked for government action to help resolve the dispute but management of Carling O'Keefe, Labatt's and Molson's have so far rejected renewed contract talks and Heinrich has been deaf to union pleas.

The brewery union and the B.C. Government Employees' Union, representing employees of the Liquor Distribution Branch announced Monday that it will try to stop shipment of all beer from the U.S., offshore and from other provinces.

The action might include pickets at border crossings or a refusal by warehouse and liquor store clerks to handle imported beer.

Meanwhile, despite the lockout, now into its fourth week, beer-barren British Columbians have been making do largely with stockpiled suds or imports from the U.S.

Tavern-keepers and beer-store owners in Washington state towns near the border are reporting mixed responses from Canadians to the labor dispute.

In Blaine, Wash., south of Vancouver, they're saying business is not likely to pick up until beer supplies run out in B.C., and they estimate that will not happen for some time yet.

"There's too much beer around," said a BCGEU spokesman. "In fact there's tons of it around. No one is suffering."

But at Sumas, Wash., southeast of Vancouver, businessmen report long lineups at the border as British Columbians swoop over the border to pick up cases of 24 selling at $10.50 to $11 a dozen, plus a $2.75 a dozen duty.

The two unions say the B.C. liquor branch has reneged on an agreement to limit shipments of imported beer into the province.

A decision to allow licensed outlets up to 90 cases a week of imported beer is helping breweries to minimize the impact of the dispute, said BCGEU general secretary John Fryer.

A liquor branch spokesman said Washington distributors had originally promised 500,000 cases a week would be destined for B.C., but the amount is actually about 300,000 cases.

While some Vancouver-area pubs have been laying off workers because of the strike, some are actually hiring staff to sell off stocks bought up before the labor dispute began.

Mike Harris, manager of the Marble Arch in Vancouver, borrowed $1 million and snapped up everything he could get his hands on before the lockout.

In Sumas, Dick Bromley, manager of the community's only supermarket, says he has cleared the store's warehouse of all commodities and is using it solely for beer.

"We wheel it in one door and out the other," he said. "This is an unexpected bonanza that we would welcome every year."

Israelis raid into Lebanon

BEIRUT (AP) — Israeli officials claimed today that between 40 and 50 Palestinian guerrillas were killed in an overnight attack by helicopter-borne Israeli commandos against Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon. The Tel Aviv officials said three Israeli soldiers were killed.

The Palestine Liberation Organization reported only 12 dead and 14 wounded among its fighters, while Lebanese provincial authorities put the PLO death toll at 20, with 25 other guerrillas wounded.

It was the biggest Israeli raid on Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon in 2½ years.

Both Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and PLO chief Yasser Arafat inspected opposite sides of the border battlefield, coming within a few kilometres of each other.

Lebanese authorities said the raids against four Palestinian strongholds touched off an artillary battle between Israeli-backed Lebanese Christian forces and PLO guerrillas at Beaufort Castle, an ancient fort built by French Crusaders about eight kilometres north of the Israeli border.

The clifftop fortress has been used as a Palestinian artillery platform.

Lebanese officials said the Christian forces advanced on the castle after four Israeli military planes attacked the ancient fortification with rockets and bombs.

Arafat claimed his forces repelled the assault.

Lebanon protested against the raid to the U.N. Security Council and U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim issued a statement "deploring" the violence.

In Washington, the State Department did not specifically condemn Israel but said it was "deeply concerned over the rising tensions and violence in the area . . . and we call on all sides to use maximum restraint."

Trains hit head on, 62 dead

WARSAW (AP) — Sixty-two passengers were killed and "many others" injured today when a freight train passed a red warning light and slammed head-on into a passenger train outside Torun in northern Poland, the official Polish news agency PAP reported.

PAP said the engineer "probably was asleep" and missed a red warning light. The crash occurred at about 4 a.m. local time.

The locomotive and first two cars of the passenger train were severely damaged, the agency said. It said the train left Bydgoszcz shortly before the accident and was bound for the central Polish city of Lodz.

The report gave no specific number of injured.

Torun is 160 kilometres south of Gdansk, the centre of a growing strike that has pitted some 100,000 workers against the regime of Communist party leader Edward Gierek.

Dublin bomb blast

DUBLIN (UPI) — The Irish Republican Army, for the first time in its history, launched a major bombing attack on public facilities inside Ireland today, destroying six buses and causing $1 million worth of damage.

Police said six of the 15 buses parked inside a depot of the Irish state transport company in Dublin were destroyed and several of the undamaged vehicles were painted with political slogans.

No one was injured, but officials estimated the damage at about $1 million.

Police said the IRA was responsible for the attack, which investigators said was the first of its kind inside the Irish Republic.

Ferry subsidy too high, says report

The subsidy paid by the provincial government to the B.C. Ferry Corp. is completely divorced from the realities of operating a ferry system, says a confidential draft report prepared for the legislature's Crown corporations' committee.

The interim report, prepared by committee staff and currently being discussed behind closed doors, says the subsidy must be changed.

One of the report's recommendations is a change in the fare structure to reward motorists who travel during off-peak hours and days.

The subsidy — a per-mile sum based on the equivalent amount of money needed to maintain the same length of highway — last year amounted to $49.5 million and allowed the corporation to show a net income of $15.5 million for the year despite an operating loss of $37.4 million.

The report says that while the current formula is simple and from the corporation's viewpoint guarantees a fixed sum each year for which no proof of need is required, there are a number of actual or potential drawbacks.

"It rewards the corporation disproportionately for long routes, whether or not such routes are justified and regardless of the volume of traffic carried, it may inhibit the corporation's ability to obtain approval for fare increases . . . and it may encourage the corporation to make less than wise business decisions," the report says.

"One of the anomalies of the current subsidy formula is that it is throwing more funds than necessary into the corporation today and may continue to do so for several years."

The report notes that while the corporation's longest route — Port Hardy to Prince Rupert — accounts for less than half of one per cent of total system traffic, it generates 64 per cent of the subsidy.

The report says the subsidy makes little or no allowance for changes from year to year in either operating costs or capital needs.

"Initial subsidy payments may have been over-generous as implied by the corporation's healthy bank account."

The report says the committee is concerned that the implications of the subsidy formula could influence and distort the corporation's decision-making process, including possibly adding longer routes without regard for traffic demand or total cost.

There are no specific changes recommended in the report. However, it is

Stroll became nightmare of death and terror

ZAMA, Alta. (CP) — Pursued by a killer bear, Reagan Whiting, 9, raced to get help for a man trapped by the bear that had already killed two people.

The boy made it safely to his father, Bud, who returned with a shotgun and drove the marauding black bear from the site where it had killed Lee Randal Morris, 44, of Calgary and Carol Ann Marshall, 26, of Edmonton, and drove Martin Ellis, 21, of Grande Prairie into a tree.

The bear was later killed near this remote community of 300, 750 kilometres northwest of Edmonton. The story of the bear attack was pieced together from accounts by local residents and Constable Gordon Elias of Assumption RCMP.

What began as pleasant evening walk Thursday near the Can-Tex oil rig for Ellis, a heavy equipment operator, and Miss Marshall, a rig janitor, erupted into a nightmare of death and terror.

The strolling couple apparently disturbed the bear near the spot where it had been devouring the body of Morris, a rig geologist, after killing him two hours earlier. Morris was taking his daily walk when he was attacked and killed.

The rogue bear crashed out of the underbrush only three or four metres from the couple and wrenched Miss Marshall out of her companion's arms as they tried to get up a tree.

The woman was killed and dragged back to the spot where the bear had partially buried the body of Morris. She was also partially devoured and buried.

Then the bear returned and climbed into the tree after Ellis as he retreated 12 metres into the flimsy upper branches, just out of reach of the bear's claws. The bear tried six times to reach him.

Elias said Ellis doesn't remember how long he was in the tree before Reagan came by.

Ellis yelled at the boy to get away and bring help, Elias said. The youngster followed the frantic instructions and fled in search of help, with the bear in pursuit, but the boy had enough of a head start to escape safely.

Reagan and his father, manager of the oil camp, returned moments later with a shotgun. The bear lunged towards them, but Whiting fired one shot and wounded the bear which retreated angrily.

Ellis was in shock after seeing the mauling of Miss Marshall and her partially-devoured body.

A group of five men from the oil rig returned to the scene armed with shotguns, but darkness cancelled the search until morning when a helicopter was sent up in search of the bear.

Pilot Don Stubb spotted the bear and landed his craft immediately. He fired four shots into the bear from his 30.06 rifle and killed the beast in its tracks.

Minimum pay law costs jobs: study

OTTAWA (CP) — Minimum wages reduce the number of jobs available for workers, at least for teen-agers, already at the bottom of the pay hierarchy, says a study by economists released Monday by two national research organizations.

The study by Carleton University professors Edwin West and Michael McKee says there is no scientific evidence to support the existing practice of Canadian governments of setting and occasionally raising the minimum wages employers under their jurisdiction must pay employees.

Further, they say the minimum wages across the country do little to eradicate poverty. They suggest wage subsidy programs — transfers of tax dollars from government to employers — or redistributing more money from the rich to the poor through the tax system, are more effective.

The study was published without endorsement by the Economic Council of Canada and the Institute for Research on Public Policy which said in a joint statement the findings support economists who argue that a minimum wage "cuts employment for people at the low end of pay scales because it becomes too costly for employers to hire these low-skilled workers."

The study contradicts the findings in five previous Canadian studies which said increases in minimum wage rates have no serious effect on employment one way or the other.

The new study is based on economic models and equations and some analysis of mostly U.S. reports while the five studies that it disputes were based primarily on surveys of employers.

The authors attempt to discredit the five studies by suggesting the governments which commissioned them had a vested interest in proving their decision to raise wages was right and good.

U.S. bank raises rate

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chase Manhattan, the third largest U.S. bank, today raised the prime lending rate to 11¼ per cent from 11 per cent, effective immediately.

"The increase was based primarily on the recent upward trend of market rates generally and should not be construed as a prediction of the future course of interest rates," Chase said in a prepared statement.

But there had been speculation the rate would increase because of a record surge in the nation's money supply in the latest statisical week and a 20.4 per cent annualized jump in wholesale prices in July.

U.S. profits plunge $19B

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Corporate profits decreased by a record $19 billion between April and June as the U.S. economy was tumbling into the worst of the current recession, the government said today.

The profits of virtually every manufacturing industry were affected, said one Commerce Department analyst. The oil industry, feeling the pinch of the new windfall profits tax, had its first decline in profits in two years.

In another section of the report, the Commerce Department said "real" Gross National Product — the total output of goods and services adjusted for inflation — fell 9 percent in the second quarter. This was only a slight revision from the record-tying 9.1 percent decline that was originally reported by the department.

The profit numbers were out for the first time and they showed American businesses had some of the roughest going they have seen since the 1950s.

Profits from current production — what companies make after inventories and capital consumption are weighted for inflation — fell a record $19 billion to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $156 billion.

The 10.9 per cent decline compared to a 0.8 per cent drop during the first three months of this year and was the largest percentage decline in 22 years.

Before tax profits, which increased 7.2 per cent in the first quarter, plunged 19.8 per cent in the second to $208.8 billion. It was the second largest percentage drop on record, outdone ongy by a 21.9 per cent decline in the fourth quarter of 1953.

After tax profits had been up 7.6 per cent during the first three months of the year. During the second quarter, they fell 18.2 percent to $129.3 billion in the third largest drop ever.

"Almost all manufacturing industries had profit losses," a Commerce analyst said. "Autos had it the worst."

The analyst said the reason for the severe decline in profits was twofold — the worst of the recession was slamming into the economy in the second quarter and the oil industry was finally beginning to feel the effects of the windfall profits tax.

The revision in the GNP was minor, only one-tenth of a percentage point.

However, the second quarter drop in GNP remains the second largest on record, outdone only by a 9.1 percent decline during the first quarter of 1975 when the nation was caught in its last recession.

The only significant revision in the GNP report was for inflation.

The Commerce Department originally reported that its fixed weight price index — which is similar to the Consumer Price Index in many respects — rose only 8.9 percent during the second quarter.

Foreign ownership of B.C. land 'near crisis'

DAWSON CREEK (CP) — Foreign ownership of agricultural land has reached near-crisis proportions in the Peace River block of British Columbia.

Crisis would be the only way to describe a situation where fully one-quarter of the farmland is in the hands of people living outside of Canada.

"It has been happening for about five years but it hasn't been until the last two years that we have been picking up on it and learning to pay attention to the problem," said Brian Harper, district agriculturist for the B.C. department of agriculture.

Harper said he and a group of concerned residents went through tax rolls and found that, as of Dec. 31, 1979, about 250,000 acres of farm land were owned by persons whose billing addresses were in foreign countries.

"And that's about 25 per cent of the total land base here," noted Harper, who says he still gets many office inquiries from foreigners interested in buying land.

"I have asked why they want to buy in B.C. They say they can buy as much as they want. There's no government legislation at all to stop foreign ownership."

B.C., unlike the Prairie provinces, has no legislation to limit foreign buying of agricultural land and Sig Peterson, the province's deputy agriculture minister, says none is planned at the moment.

"Foreign ownership is a growing concern in B.C. but we're not entertaining thoughts of legislation at this point," Peterson said.

"But we are monitoring land transactions, we must be masters of our own land in the end and we must not allow our agricultural community to become tenants."

The situation is exasperating people like Harper who were born and raised in the area. They worry about the effect on land prices as well as on the community.

"A year ago, for example, you could pick up a quarter-section of class 2 land for $60,000 or $70,000," said Harper, who also farms in the Peace.

"Right now that same quarter is selling for $80,000 plus.

"It's disturbing to the people because you lose the community structure and the family farm units."

Harper said money is no object to the buyers, most of whom come from Germany, the United States, France and England.

"They're looking for 3,000-a and 4,000-acre blocks of land and they're willing to pay a very high price for it."

Peterson said foreign ownership is nothing new in B.C., but had previously been confined mostly to Americans in the ranching industry and they had usually taken up full-time residency on the land.

Foreign interest is growing, he said, because Canadian and American dollars are badly inflated compared with other currencies such as the German mark.

"A University of Chicago study recently showed in a 32-year period, land was by far the best investment. The annual compounded rate of return was about 11.4 per cent."

But the realities of economics don't placate those who object to the intrusions.

"A lot of people in the Peace established themselves here many years ago, and they put a lot of blood, sweat and tears into the whole agricultural scene," said Harper.

"It seems to be degrading that type of tradition. It's very sad to see."

Infection breaks out in Nakusp

NAKUSP (CP) — A new and contagious infection with symptoms similar to salmonella poisoning has broken out in this West Kootenay community 110 kilometres north of Nelson.

Area medical health officer Harry Pagan said campylobacter, a gut infection which can cause vomiting, diarrhea and extreme dehydration, has been diagnosed in 12 cases in Nakusp and once in Nelson in the past three weeks.

Like salmonella, the infection can be carried in human and animal feces, or in improperly cooked fowl.

Health officials are testing Nakusp water as a possible source of contamination.

Campylobacter has only recently been recognized as a distinct disease, and public health laboratories have begun routine testing for it in human feces within the past year.

The infection can be passed among humans by handling contaminated articles or eating contaminated food.

Those people proven to be infected in Nakusp ranged in age from 20 to 54, and half required hospitalization.

No plans to ban hunting in Spatsizi, says Chabot

The provincial government will continue to allow limited hunting in provincial parks despite an attempt by Greenpeace to block trophy hunting in the Spatsizi park in northwestern B.C., two cabinet ministers said Monday.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers branded as nonsense a weekend claim by Greenpeace that there were no fish and wildlife staff members in the Spatsizi park.

Lands, Parks and Housing Minister Jim Cabot said the government allows hunting in "about 75 per cent of more than 300 provincial parks and we do it for the good of the animals."

"These people are against any hunting and that is silly," Chabot said.

The fish and wildlife branch says that there has to be limited harvest or we could end up with inbred animals — stunted wildlife that could become inbred like the Sable Island ponies."

A Greenpeace spokesman said on the weekend that the organization's volunteers had not seen any hunters in the park.

Chabot laughed when told that Greenpeace was trying to locate hunters by helicopter.

"The park is 1.5 million acres of wilderness and it seems that Greenpeace has more money than most British Columbians today to spend on a venture that is similar to trying to find a needle in a haystack. A few hunters are there but they will not be easy to find."

Rogers said he is not about to inform Greenpeace where the fish and wildlife staff are in the park "so they can possibly attempt a confrontation as part of a publicity campaign."

Meanwhile, an outfitter in Spatsizi park has told Greenpeace members looking for big-game hunters in the park that no hunters will be in the park until early September, says a Greenpeace member.

Muck and luck get credit

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Muck and luck were given the credit Monday by relieved officials reviewing the peaceful events of a weekend rock festival near here.

The muck came from two days of rain that turned the festival site into a quagmire. The luck figured in the thousands of music fans who failed to show up and strain facilities that police, medical and other officials condemned as totally inadequate.

Not so relieved were the promoters of Rock and Roll '80, who were unavailable for comment Monday, but who had said they needed a crowd of at least 15,000 to break even. Unofficial estimates put the number of people who turned up to enjoy performances by such acts as Alvin Bishop and Rick Nelson at between 8,000 and 12,000.

"Promoters couldn't do anything about the rain, but the main road into the site and the parking lot weren't gravelled which turned the areas into a sea of mud," said RCMP S.Sgt Stan Komansky who was in charge of the 60-member policy security team.

"If we'd had to get someone out of there in a hurry, there might have been problems," said Komansky. Traffic was backed up eight kilometres at one point.

As it was, police made several alcohol and drug seizures and charged three people with fraud for circulating counterfeit tickets.

Pat Bunn, chief of the St. John Ambulance unit which provided first aid service at the site, said facilities were "absolutely terrible."

He said that "it would have been impossible to cope with an emergency."

"We were promised a much larger trailer than the small one we got and initially had to share half the space of that with some food caterers."

Dr. Alastair Duncan, one of four doctors in attendance, agreed that organizers were lucky no major emergencies arose.

About 110 people were treated for minor abrasions, cuts, burns, alcohol abuse and one person had a broken ankle, he said.

David Coombe, chief health inspector for the Fraser-Fort George Regional District, said that most of the required preparations were not in order and that the site was "in a state of confusion."

Commitments to provide water supplies, garbage disposal, facilities for caterers, site lighting and public toilets were not properly met, he said.

"We made the best with what we had," Coombe said.

Bottom line required

Foreign observers of Canadian domestic politics must be amused by the goings-on on in this country.

While the federal government and the 10 provinces are attempting to hammer out a new constitution which they hope will take the nation into the 21st century and beyond, the leader of one province has seemingly indicated his predisposition to civil war. How else does the country interpret comments like "the provinces would resist in the strongest possible way if there is a federal natural gas export tax?"

If the situation wasn't so serious in terms of the country's territorial integrity, it might also be funny to Canadians. It defies reason for Alberta premier Peter Lougheed to say that a federally imposed export tax on his province's natural gas would amount to a declaration of war against Western Canada when he has already agreed to be party to processes designed to reform the constitution. It is obvious that he is at the moment no more concerned with constitutional negotiations than Rene Levesque was before the sovereignty-association referendum.

Out of the dozen or so major items on the constitutional negotiating table, the matter of resource control and ownership lies closest to the hearts of the provincial leaders, particularly western premiers. As far as they are concerned, either the provinces' ownership as set out in the BNA Act should remain the same or control should be further consolidated in favor of the provinces. As far as Peter Lougheed is concerned, either Alberta (and British Columbia) receive the exclusive powers they seek over natural resource control, or all talk of constitutional reform is pointless.

It is clear that Prime Minister Trudeau must make up his mind about the natural gas export issue if the nation is to fulfill the promises and obligations to the people of Quebec. In principle he is right by insisting that specific energy policies should not become prerequisites for constitutional reform. In theory it does seem pointless to figure out an end result, such as an export tax, before agreement has been reached on the formula.

However, Premier Lougheed has laid out his terms for reform in language that was never used by Premier Levesque. If Trudeau doesn't give Lougheed the bottom line on the federal government's export gas policy, the country will be no closer to a new constitution than if Ottawa levies an export tax.

Broader view needed

An economic study made public yesterday concludes that the existence of minimum wage scales reduces the number of jobs available.

The study, undertaken by Carleton University economics professors Edwin West and Michael McKee, says more jobs would be made available, especially for teenagers and others at the bottom end of the pay hierarchy, if minimum wages were abolished.

The economists suggest also that the existence of the minimum wage scales does little to eliminate poverty. Other powers available to governments could be far more effective in eradicating poverty if governments wanted, they say.

West and McKee make extensive use of a 1978 Quebec study which showed that between 25,000 and 45,000 low-paying jobs had been permanently lost in the province in the preceding two years because of increases in the minimum wage.

The authors of the study may or may not be right. Five previous Canadian studies have concluded that increases in the minimum wage rates have no significant effect on employment.

In any case, the economists may be oversimplyifying the situation. Even if elimination of the minimum wage increased the number of available jobs, that would not necessarily reduce unemployment in Canada.

The jobs would, by definition, be extremely low-paying, presumably significantly below the current minimum wage levels which now average about $3.25 per hour across the country.

Employers might create these new low-paying jobs, but who would fill them? A significant number of workers would find they would receive more from unemployment insurance or welfare than from taking a job at $2 or $2.50 an hour.

Those wages would not be sufficient to maintain a decent standard of living for a family, a fact the government has noticed in increasing welfare and UIC rates.

To be useful to governments, a study of minimum wages needs to consider the broader social picture, not just the number of jobs that may be created or lost.

ANTHONY LEWIS

An ego with nuclear punch

Why does President Carter keep on as his national security advisor a man with a record of folly, distrusted abroad and divisive at home? That is the real question posed by the affair of the nuclear targeting policy.

What the public has heard, mostly, is that Secretary of State Muskie knew nothing about it when President Carter signed a directive making Soviet missile silos and command posts priority targets for our missiles. It was a slip, officials suggested, an inadvertence. It was not. Muskie and the entire State Department were deliberately kept in ignorance of the policy by the national security advisor, Zbigniew Brzezinski.

The episode demands detailed consideration. For it adds up to a classic example of how not to run a government.

Specific targets

The strategic assumption for years was that a nuclear attack by either of the superpowers would bring devastating retaliation on the other's cities: a threat of such horror as to deter the use of nuclear weapons. But American weapons have become so much more numerous, and accurate, that more have in fact come to be aimed at specific military targets than at cities.

The question was whether Carter should approve the new reality in an official strategy document. By doing so he would put the Russians on notice that if they used nuclear weapons anywhere, we could make a precise response on their military installations — rather than having as our only option a massive strike that no president would want to order. The limited option would be more credible, it was argued, and hence more likely to deter the Soviets.

But there are doubts. An announced policy of targeting Soviet silos might sound like a "first strike" strategy — the ability to knock out all or most retaliatory power and hence leave the other side without a deterrent. Again, who would call off a "limited" nuclear war if command posts had been obliterated? And doesn't the whole idea of a "limited" nuclear war make the unthinkable seem more thinkable?

Brzezinski pressed hard, starting in the spring of 1979, for adoption of the new doctrine. No one at State knew the study was under way until an official heard of it from a Defense Department colleague. Then Secretary of State Vance was told, and aides were included in three perfunctory meetings — but not in the bureaucratic process that mattered.

Secretary of Defense Brown and his people were in fact dubious about the idea of a formal new targeting doctrine, preferring to let reality develop. Apparently because of their reluctance, the idea was put aside last year.

Then, two months ago, Brzezinski revived it and began rushing it through. Drafting was done by a small group of his staff and Defense officials. Carter signed the paper, Presidential Directive 59, on July 25.

During the drafting period Muskie met several times with Brzezinski. He had breakfast with Brzezinski, Brown and Carter on the very day of the signing, July 25. He was never told about the targeting directive.

Whatever the merits of the policy, the way it was done had predictably bad results. The secretary of state was humiliated. Brown had planned to disclose the policy in a speech, playing it down as an inevitable development, and he was distressed to have newspaper stories dramatize it. He had advised allied defense officials, but the European public was agitated just at a time when the deployment of nuclear weapons is a growing political issue in Britain, Belgium, the Netherlands and West Germany.

The process was accurately appraised by Henry Kissinger: "Highly delicate, controversial issues that have remained unsettled for three and one-half years should not be resolved by public pronouncements in the middle of an election campaign."

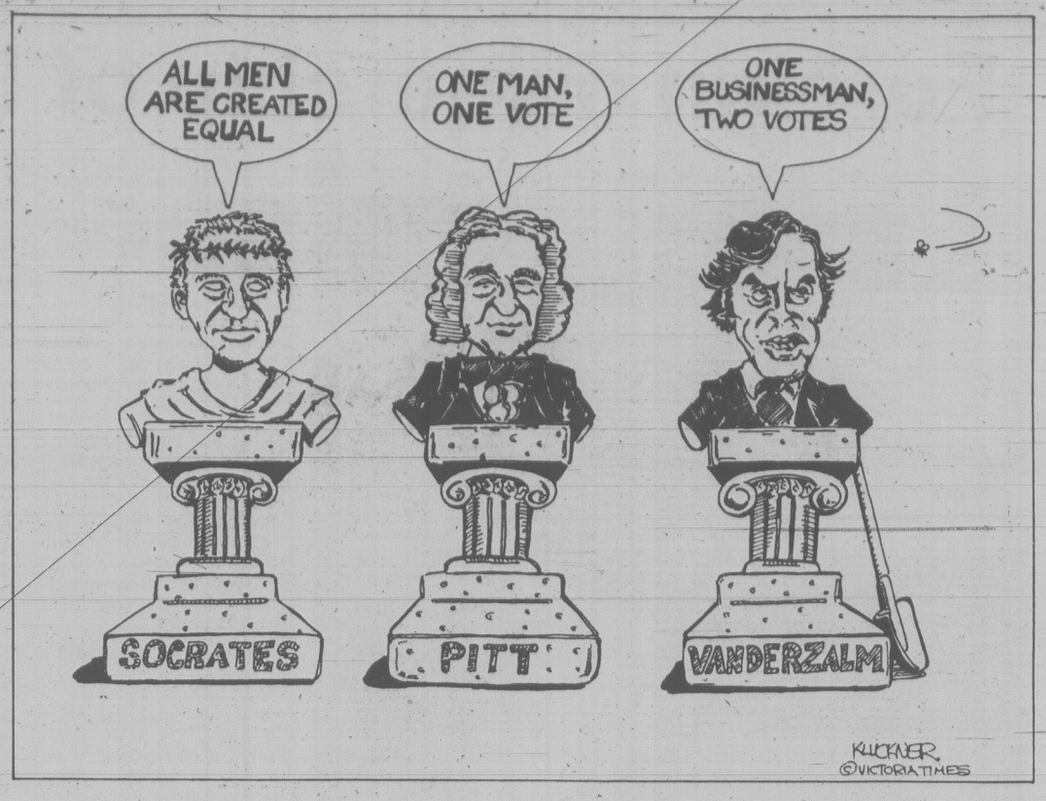
The election was very likely Brzezinski's precise reason for reviving and rushing the proposal — with the idea of making Carter look tough and thus responding to Ronald Reagan's talk of nuclear weakness. Excluding the viewpoint of the State Department made it easier to push through, and surely also gave Brzezinski personal satisfaction.

"Relentless self-promotion," as a Wall Street Journal article put it, has been a prime Brzezinski characteristic. There is a disarming openness about his ego, as when he told a reporter that he was the only government official aside from the president in a magazine's list of the 10 most influential Americans. But his glib essays into policy-making have not been funny.

Uneven record

He told Carter to the end that the shah would survive, putting down other intelligence — and then, when the ayatollah won, said he welcomed the change because "it brings things to a head." His flamboyant behavior and provocative statements on a trip to China in 1978 pointlessly damaged U.S.-Soviet relations. After the Afghanistan invasion he went to Pakistan and squinted down a gun barrel in the Khyber Pass.

Why does the president want such a person in a position that should be giving him the ability to make detached judgements from all the information? What worries people about Jimmy Carter is not his ability to deliver a convention speech but his ability to run a government.



CAROL GOAR

Unemployment undervalued

OTTAWA — A rare and thoughtful silence prevailed in the capital Friday as a week of rapid-fire economic jolts drew to a close.

Nowhere to be heard were the usual moans and groans about rising prices and painful unemployment. Missing, too, were the customary government assurances that "inflation is still Public Enemy Number One."

The obvious reason for the hush was that most politicians had abandoned Ottawa for home or cottage. But there was another, deeper reason.

It was a ringing statement of economic principles delivered 500 miles away by Senator Edward Kennedy. His words at Madison Square Gardens Tuesday may change the rules of game for years to come.

Weighty pledge

Kennedy declared — and U.S. President Jimmy Carter accepted — "Let us pledge that we will never misuse high unemployment, high interest rates and human misery as false weapons against inflation.

"Let us pledge that employment will be the first priority of our economic policy."

That would be a radical change. Since the mid-1970s, most western nations — Canada included — have treated the battle against inflation as their top priority. Implicit in this philosophy is an admission that some workers will be forced out of their jobs in the fight to keep the lid on soaring prices.

Kennedy's speech spellbound Canadians as it did Democrats at the convention. But its far-reaching implications provoked little comment.

Meanwhile, economic trouble signals rained down on Ottawa:

—New inflation figures showed cost of living rose last month by an unwelcome 0.8 per cent, bringing the 12-month rate to 10.1 per cent.

—Statistics Canada released its July unemployment figures, showing that 850,000 Canadians were officially jobless last month, but hinting that thousands more had become so discouraged in their search for work that they'd given up even listing themselves as unemployed.

—An energy department study confirmed public suspicions that the oil companies made higher-than-ever profits last year — $4.7 billion, a 54 per cent leap over the previous year's level. But the foreign-owned oil giants channelled a smaller proportion of their gains back into exploration. Most disturbing of all, for many consumers, was the oil industry's response to these figures. Company spokesmen said their profits were not excessive — in fact they might not even be large enough to finance the energy projects needed to guarantee that Canadians will have sufficient oil and gas for the future.

—The Conference Board issued yet another of its gloomy forecasts, warning that only Alberta and British Columbia could expect any signficant growth this year. The private forecasting agency said Canada's outlook is even darker now than when it issued its April forecast because the summer's drought had battered the economies of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

If the country already has an inflation rate of more than 10 per cent, what will happen on September 1, when Alberta's $2-a-barrel increase in petroleum prices reaches the consumer?

Statistics Canada price experts refused this week to offer concrete predictions, but said the country's general price level has historically jumped by 0.1 per cent to 0.2 per cent every time the price of petroleum has risen by $1-a-barrel.

But this is only the first-round effect. By the time the increased cost of energy finds its way into all the products with fuel costs built into their price tags — such as food, petrochemicals and steel — the impact can be as much as a full percentage point.

High food costs

Food costs are going up by almost one per cent each month now. And this is summer, when all kinds of cheap locally-grown products are on the market. What can shoppers expect in their supermarkets this fall?

If the national economy is headed for further declines this year, as most economists are predicting, will this mean layoffs and plant closings?

Soaring above all these individual concerns, came Kennedy's voice: "To those who are idle in the cities and industry of American, let us provide new hope for the dignity of useful work.

"To all those who see the worth of their work and their savings taken by inflation, let us offer new hope for a stable economy."

An awesome challenge. Ottawa pondered it in silence.

Long-term care

I am responding to the letter of Mr. Don Munro, Member of Parliament, Esquimalt-Saanich, which appeared in the letters section July 22, 1980, dealing with the question of long-term care and extended care patients occupying acute care beds.

I can assure Mr. Munro and other citizens of the Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich area that alternate care facilities providing an additional 728 beds are being developed to meet the need for extended care and intermediate care clients.

Although I appreciate Mr. Munro's suggestion of converting public school buildings to provide more extended care space, the cost of renovating such buildings to provide a suitable and comfortable environment for elderly residents is often greater than to build more suitable new facilities.

We are continuing to give priority to the development of new space and I am confident that our current construction program will alleviate the need for an extensive waiting period prior to elective surgery. — K. Rafe Mair, Minister of Health.

All wet

I always enjoy visiting Victoria with its many fine attractions. However, I was very disappointed with a recent visit to Sealand at Oak Bay Marina.

My major complaint is that there was no seating area from which to view the sea lion and killer whale shows. Spectators were expected to lean against a guardrail on the edge of the pool to wait for the next time around. Also, if you stood in front, it was almost impossible to avoid getting wet, especially during the whale show. My one-year-old daughter and I were literally drenched even though we were behind the white section of the rail, the "safest place to be", according to the commentator. Of course, we were expected to take our drenching all in good fun as it was part of the whale's act — to get the audience with. However, it really wasn't fun to become unexpectedly very wet and have to walk the 10 blocks back to our residence, especially when the morning air was quite cool. Two elderly ladies who had been standing next to me also showed annoyance at the drenching.

May I suggest that the Sealand management consider either expanding the spectator area or at least forewarn the tourists as to what to expect before they pay the admission fee. — Mary Lou Routley, Kamloops.

Unrestrained

In view of Alderman Irene Block's unrestrained comment concerning the awarding of the contract for the Saanich police building to John Di Castri, I should like to point out that Mr. Di Castri has served Saanich well.

This architect planned the Senior Citizens Activity Centre on Hampton Road. The budget for the facility was so limited that original plans had to be severely cut and profits to the architect were minimal. Nevertheless, Mr. Di Castri produced a building that was home-like and functional and has been a joy to many citizens.

The Garth Homer Centre, Nigel House, and the Battin-Fielding Memorial Housing, all three for the handicapped, were designed by Mr. Di Castri.

The funding for these buildings was tenuous and restricted; these were "pioneer" projects. The architect worked on in good faith, the result has been a fine centre used by the handicapped, the community and the municipality itself; and comfortable homes for the handicapped and their families.

Of course, Mr. Di Castri has many other fine buildings to his credit, in the Capital Region and beyond. — Edith R. Gunning, 225 Belleville Street.

Half the battle

Victoria is one of Canada's most beautiful cities and, perhaps its most charming. The B.C. Steamship Co. offers a rapid and pleasant access to Victoria from Seattle, once its ships have left the dock. The company's treatment of potential visitors prior to departure, however, is thoroughly discouraging.

My travel agent in Houston telephoned the B.C. Steamship Co.'s office in Seattle for boat schedules so that trips to and from Seattle could be coordinated. The company representative refused verbal information, and also refused to mail a printed schedule. Fortunately, my father obtained a schedule in Victoria and mailed it to me. Only then was I able to plan my trip via plane and ship.

Wanting to travel on the Princess Victoria, I was faced with a six hour layover in Seattle during which time I planned to explore the waterfront restoration area of Seattle. B.C. Steamship Co. negated that plan by having no baggage checking facilities available in Seattle so that I was treated to a long vigil on a hard plastic chair in a cold, cheerless waiting room watching over my luggage. After two and one-half hours of this I foreswore the Princess Victoria and caught the 4:00 p.m. Flying Princess.

I did not expect the B.C. Steamship Co. to schedule its trips to conform to American air schedules but I did expect some means of checking one's bags, if not a service at least a locker. Further, I cannot understand the Seattle office's refusal to furnish schedule information to a travel agent; are they not in the same business? If Victoria wants to promote tourism, B.C. Steamship Co.'s Seattle office would be well advised to change policy and improve its facilities.

Getting there, thanks to B.C. Steamship Co., was no fun at all! — Edythe W. Popken, Houston, Texas.

Self-promotion

It is time someone told Pat McGeer that his clownish behaviour has no place in the British Columbia Legislature. For a minister of the crown to minimize the seriousness of an affront to a news cameraman by appearing as he did, is inexcusable.

He has already tried the patience of many of your readers by his earlier irresponsible actions, which seem to have been aimed at publicity for himself in an overt campaign for promotion. — Roy A. Wainwright, 3250 Exeter Road.

Black militancy escalates

By PATRICK LAURENCE
Manchester Guardian

JOHANNESBURG — The past few months have seen a marked increase in militancy by black workers in South Africa, culminating recently in an unprecedentedly large strike by Johannesburg municipal workers which threatened to paralyze the nation's biggest city.

According to an observer, Rob Lambert, lecturer in industrial sociology at the University of Natal, during the past three months about 50,000 black workers in all major industrial centres have launched one of the most protracted and determined campaigns against the "exploitive" system in South African labor history.

The Johannesburg strike was particularly significant because it involved mainly migrant workers, the most vulnerable of South Africa's black workers. They are unskilled, replaceable and liable to deportation to the "homelands", where there are a large number of unemployed clamoring for work.

The strike was broken by tough action by Johannesburg City Council and the police, whose success related in part to their ability to restrict the workers to different compounds and thereby to divide and weaken them. But it raised the question of what has caused the upsurge in black workers self-assertiveness.

At an elementary but vital level, emerging black worker militancy is part of the wider pattern of increasing black resistance to white control. It draws sustenance from black triumphs in Zimbabwe, Mozambique, and Angola, from the ideology of black consciousness and from armed strikes by insurgents of the African National Congress.

It is perhaps significant that demands by workers for higher wages and, equally important, for the right to speak through unions of their own choice, seem to have come at moments of recession in the activities of black students and pupils. This does not suggest a coordinated campaign between different sectors of the black community, merely that they interact on, and reinforce, one another.

The rise of black trade unionism is, of course, not an entirely new development. Its immediate origins go back to 1973, when, following resistance to the migrant labor system by Ovambo workers in Namibia (South West Africa), there was a series of strikes in Natal and, to a lesser extent, Johannesburg.

For various reasons, including gradual improvements in black wages, black workers went into a period of relative inactivity in subsequent years. Where there was a record number of 246 strikes by black workers in 1973, the number of strikes dropped steadily to below 50 in 1978.

But last year a new factor entered the scene, the first report by the Wiehaln Commission on South African labor laws and a subsequent amendment to the Industrial Conciliation Act to extend the right of registration to black trade unions under specific conditions.

Until then, black unions were denied registration rights and therefore barred from participation in industrial councils, where bargaining on minimum wages and on working conditions takes place on an industry-wide basis.

As the Wiehahn Commission said, one of the purposes in extending registration rights to black unions was to bring them under the "discipline and control" of the statutory system of labor relations. The controls included checks on black trade union finances, prohibition of overt involvement in political matters, and restrictions on training of blacks in trade unionism by foreigners.

Controls aside, the Wiehahn Commission and legislative amendments which it inspired, like so much else associated with the "reformism" of the Botha goverment, aroused black expectations and presaged a resurgence of black trade unionism. One of the commissioners, Arthur Grobbelaar, warned employers to brace themselves for black trade unionist activity.

Fuelling black worker restlessness were rising prices, particularly of food, which threatened to neutralize wage increases recorded in the 1970s. By one calculation, inflation was running at 20 per cent in June, and hitting the poor, and therefore nearly all blacks, the hardest.

Employers were not without a strategy of their own to contain the rising militancy of black unions. There were 27 independent black unions at the time of the Wiehahn Commission report, but the number has risen since. One key aspect of the employer strategy was to form their own "in-company" unions, and then to try to deal with these docile unions while withholding recognition from independent unions.

For this reason some of the recent strikes have focused on black worker demands for recognition of their unions.

The strike by the Johannesburg municipal workers was a barometer to the rise of black worker power for another reason. The independent union was formed barely a month before the strike, but was able to bring two-thirds of the black workforce out on strike, a doubly significant achievement given the vulnerability of most of the workers because of their migrant labor status.

Another point highlighted by the Johannesburg strike was the inability of the official system to cope with the black militancy.

As Lambert noted in an analysis of the situation: "If nothing else, the Johannesburg strike should generate reflection. As real wages decline dramatically during the 1980s, conflict at the work place will intensify. So might repression, or a more enlightened approach to labor."

'Who's the next?'

By GARRETT HARDIN

(Hardin, professor emeritus of human ecology at the University of California, Santa Barbara, is the author of The Limits of Altruism. He wrote this for The Los Angeles Times)

No humane person can hear the stories of the incoming refugees without wanting to help them. The courage these people show in the face of nearly overwhelming disaster makes us proud of the human race.

Yet, we should look at the larger picture. First, there were the Vietnamese; then the Laotians; then the Cambodians (for whom we could do little). Now come the Cubans and the Haitians, the former political refugees, the latter economic refugees. Who's next?

Some say we should take in every would-be immigrant "because we are a nation of immigrants." But, every nation is a nation of immigrants. England, France, Italy, Greece — all were populated first by immigrants. When a territory is just being opened up, immigrants are an asset. As its carrying capacity is reached, a nation of rational people closes the doors.

Our biggest trouble is that unfortunate statue in New York harbor. "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free," says the invitation written on the Statue of Liberty. France gave us this statue in 1886, when we were young and foolish. France has no such inviting statue at its border, nor does any other nation. Other nations know better. We Americans still suffer from an adolescent's illusion of unlimited power to do good.

We are only 5 per cent of the world's population, and this percentage is decreasing. Our population grows only one-third as fast as the population of poor countries. Compassionate people often turn aside from such data, saying, "That's just a numbers game." Precisely: It is the numbers that make the problem, not the individual cases.

The immigrant named Manuel Estrada, educated in the school of advertisy, is an admirable person. So is Hee Hong Lee, and Lam Van Sing, but what are we to do with millions of Estradas, Lees and Van Sings? The number that will try to migrate into the U.S. tomorrow depends on what we do today.

The Cuban problem is not solely political. Basically, it is a problem of too many people. Their number has exceeded the carrying capacity of the island. Before Castro, the United States kept this population afloat with generous subsidies to its sugar industry. Under Castro, excess young men (politically always the most dangerous group) were sold off as mercenary soldiers to serve the Soviets in Africa.

Now, plant diseases have created new stresses. If Cuba was underpopulated, these stresses could be endured. Castro is "generously" allowing some of the excess to come to the United States. Naturally, most of the migrants are politically opposed to Castro, but does that make the basic problem a political one?

We could cut Cuba's problem in half by taking in five million refugees. But the Cubans who remained there would, at the present rate of population growth, bring the number of inhabitants back up to 10 million in 58 years. (Perhaps, feeling less stress, they would do it sooner.) The question is: Can external generosity solve an internal population problem?

'When we were young and foolish'

Candidates for our benevolence are almost beyond numbering. There are 6 million Haitians, most of them desperately poor. Cambodia, even after massive genocide, still has several million people who would jump at a chance to leave. A fair share of Vietnam's 52 million would like to emigrate, too. It is reported that 50 per cent of the 40 million South Koreans also want to come to the United States.

Somalia has 1.3 million homeless refugees. International agencies estimate the world's total of displaced refugees at 9 to 16 million. Should we take them all in?

All told, there are some 800 million people in the world who are desperately poor, and their numbers are increasing by 25 million per year. Can we rescue them all? Most of them are having political problems: Is that relevant?

Consider the five most serious kinds of burdens immigrants place on us: food, housing, jobs, energy and public services.

At first glance, it looks like we have plenty of food. Americans produce twice as much grain as they consume. We could share the extra food with another 230 million people. Unfortunately, the sale of grain is our principal source of foreign exchange, which we need to buy oil to fuel up our tractors to grow next year's crops. And, to drive to work to earn the money needed to buy food.

Housing? Are we so awash in adequate housing that we can share with others? And who will do the sharing — our rich, or our poor?

Jobs? Secretary of Labor F. Ray Marshall says we could reduce unemployment (now at 7 per cent, and expected to rise to 9 per cent to less than 4 per cent, if there were no illegal immigrants in the country. Some college professors maintain that immigrants do not take jobs from citizens. It is quite true that they take few, if any, professors' jobs; and they do not take jobs from newspapermen. But what about the jobs of young blacks and native Chicanos?

Energy? Expressed in barrels-of-oil equivalence, Americans use 60 barrels of oil per person, per year. Nobody produces energy, we merely extract energy from the ground (oil, coal, etc.), or from sunlight. Suppose an immigrant lives 50 years after coming here, suppose he has no children, and suppose he lives on only half as much energy as an American. Given these assumptions, an immigrant will use 50 times 30 barrels-of-oil equivalence, or 1,500 barrels during his lifetime. Does he bring 1,500 barrels of oil with him? If not, the rest of us must share with him.

The burden of public services is a complex one, made up in part, of schooling, health services and police protection. Immigrants increase the variety of our society, and variety is a good thing. But it is possible to have too much of a good thing.

Bilingual education is already a headache. And now bilingualism is changing to polilingualism. San Francisco currently distributes ballots in as many as six languages. If we admit every new unfortunate group as it surfaces, we may end up like India with 14 major languages and over 100 dialects. Can democracy survive that much variety?

We are a compassionate people. When others knock at our door, we want to share. But at some point in the escalation of charity, we should think of our children. Do we have the right to give away the resources they will need to live? For that matter, are we adequately providing for the poor who are already with us? And how well are we treating our most recent immigrants and their children?

Our hearts bleed at the thought of the hundreds of millions of needy in the world, but bleeding solves no problems. Our hearts need to think too. There are limits to the amounts of good we can do. If we try to do too much, we will end up doing harm. It is time to determine the limits. We must do this, not so much for the sake of those who are well off in America now, but for the sake of our poor and all of our children.

The Italian village blues

Katharine Whitehorn

ROME — "Mama Mia!" is as much the stock phrase for portraying Italians as "Begorrah!" for the Irish or "Hoots, mon!" for the Scots — not that either have actually said such things for a century. But you don't have to know much — or indeed anything — about Italy to be sure that, whatever else is wrong with it, the great throbbing family heart makes up for everything.

Giovanna Mourton doesn't agree. Yes, she knows Italy — she's half Italian. Yes, she's lived there — she grew up in Italy before the war and worked in the desolate South just after it. She knows all about the untouched, warm, supporting village pattern mourned by social workers the world over. And she thinks such village life is dreadful.

She came out to Italy soon after the war, when southern Italy was poor three times over — once from "200 years of bad agriculture", once from several sets of occupying armies and then, later, by the widening ripples of a ruinous earthquake.

She came to help set up school projects for the Save the Children Fund, but found that half the children were in no state to receive any schooling; food and health had to come first. When people sentimentalize village life she explodes.

"Day after day people say how wonderful these big families were. Do they know what it was like? Having 10 children of whom five died? Never being able to go out alone? Look, village life was hell.

"I know what it is like to have water for one hour a day, no appliances or water heater or stove — the commonest trouble for children was burns on their bottoms and their faces, falling into the fire."

These were the days when there were still 35,000 people actually living in caves in Metera; when the maghi — witch doctors — were the only health service going, and were like as not to recommend two crosses painted under the ear as a treatment for mumps.

Giovanna talked about whole villages without a single piece of sanitation, huge families living in a single crumbling shack: "I've talked to a peasant girl about what it was like starting your periods there: no sanitary towels of course; no one had told her about it; and she had to hide the soiled rags in cracks in the stone walls in case her brother or father would see them. And dowries! They only went out 10 years ago; and if you didn't have a dowry you simply didn't get married."

Floundering under all this, I still put up a feeble case for the big family. The poverty, yes, that was frightful; but surely the warm, friendly presence of the family was good? Surely at least they looked after their old people?

She wouldn't even have that. She told me about her mother, who had said, "But why can't I live with you?"

"If she'd come to live with me I'd have had to give up any sort of work." Instead she was in a home in Lincoln. (That's in Britain — Giovanna is half English and married to an Englishman.)

"The nurses were there round the clock; they were wonderful; how could a daughter have listened to those stories again and again and again, done all the messy things? But for them it was only eight hours at a time; they were endlessly cheerful; there were 26 books by her bed from the local free library; if anybody says anything against British geriatric wards or social services I'll bash them.

"The extended family is fine if you're a man," she said. "But when they say, 'This person is well enough to go home and be looked after by the family,' who do they mean? By the middle-aged woman! What about her?

"I brought a group of Welsh miners out here on an exchange to some farming families living in the Pontine Marshes — that's rich land, they aren't poor. And there was one house, where the grandmother lived and her son and his wife; and their son and his wife; and a flat was being made for another son who would undoubtedly bring his wife there. So tranquil, from the outside.

"But that middle-aged woman would say sadly, 'I haven't been allowed to cook a meal in my house for 30 years' — the grandmother does it. This woman worked in the fields all the time — she didn't have a choice; and the youngest wife did all the cleaning for everybody, all the time; just that, nothing else."

I wouldn't care for that, much; and nor, I guess, would most women. Is it possible that the extended family is like mental hospitals or holiday camps or a Good Boarding School: an absolute excellent idea — for other people?

Doman's Nanaimo pulp mill on track

VANCOUVER (CP) — Doman Industries Ltd. still intends to build a thermo-mechanical pulp mill at Nanaimo despite a deal last week under which it will buy one-third of Rayonier Canada Ltd., says Herb Doman, company president.

Doman, Whonnock Industries Ltd. and B.C. Forest Products Ltd, reached an agreement with International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. Thursday to buy Rayonier for $420 million.

Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd. operates two pulp mills on the B.C. coast, three sawmills in the Vancouver region, and has extensive long-term rights to harvest Crown timber along the coast and on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Doman said in an interview from Duncan, B.C. it is too early to comment on the possibility of a new company — to be formed by BCFP, Whonnock and Doman — going into partnership with Doman in Nanaimo on eastern Vancouver Island. A site for the pulp mill will be ready by April or May of next year, he said.

One third interest in Rayonier will give Doman an important timber base, he said, particularly since Doman buys more than half of its logs on the open market.

Doman said he believes his company can bring sawmilling expertise into the Rayonier partnership, Whonnock has sawmilling and specialized logging expertise and "BCFP has an excellent track record in pulp."

Battle over control of United Canso ends

HALIFAX (UPC) — A bitter battle for management control of United Canso Oil and Gas Ltd. has ended with a decision by the Nova Scotia Supreme Court to uphold a shareholders' vote to dismiss the board of directors.

Mr. Justice Doane Hallett granted a request by the new management, headed by Calgary oil consultant John Duby, to force company president John Buckley of New York to surrender all company records and keys to the head office.

At the same time, the judge rejected Buckley's application for the court to appoint a referee to oversee a recount of the shareholders' vote held at a special meeting June 23.

Buckley had alleged proxy voting irregularities, but Hallett said he was only "grasping at straws" in an effort to retain control of the company. He said also Buckley acted in bad faith by not accepting the shareholders' decision.

Buckley had argued that 2 million of the 3.5 million shares voted in the proxy battle were signed by rubber stamps or other signature duplicating methods and not by hand. He argued also that the sale of 600,000 shares before the vote had outdated the voter's list.

Vancouver firm gets export deal

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal Export Development Corp. announced today a financing agreement for the sale of radiotelephone equipment to Mexico by Glenayre Electronics Ltd. of Vancouver.

The agreement involves a loan of $1.4 million U.S. to Industrias Unidas S.A. of Mexico for the purchase of radio telephone handsets for vehicles and for terminal stations.

The total sale by Glenayre is valued at $1.7 million U.S. and is expected to generate 65 man-years of work in Canada.

Subsidy favors potential vices understood the subsidy question has caused considerable discussion at the closed committee meetings.

The report — the first of at least two to be discussed by the committee — also is highly critical of the corporation's accounting procedures, suggesting among other things that the subsidy, if continued, be shown on a separate balance sheet.

Highways and Transportation Minister Alex Fraser said he had not yet seen the confidential staff report but said he wasn't concerned by criticism from "armchair generals."

"The subsidy, based on highways maintenance costs, has been in place for some time now so it doesn't surprise me when armchair generals find something to criticize in the formula," he said.

"From what I can understand they are saying the formula as it is is too liberal. Are they suggesting that we reduce the subsidy and increase the fares to make up the difference? Is that what they are saying?"

Fraser said he had not yet seen a copy of the confidential report presented to the Crown Corporations Committees.

"I understand they leaked it, but I havn't seen a copy," he said. "And I understand they have pointed to what they consider flaws in the present agreement but havn't come up with any solutions."

Stewart 'resting' in hospital

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actor James Stewart is "under observation" in the St. John's Hospital coronary care unit, but a personal spokesman said Monday the 72-year-old actor is "resting comfortably" and "there's no cause for alarm."

"He and his wife, Gloria, drove to the hospital Friday night," said John Strauss, Stewart's public relations man for the last 20 years. "There's no cause for alarm."

Strauss said the Oscar-winning actor has not had a heart attack.

"As far as I know he didn't have any chest pains and he's resting comfortably," Strauss said. "Half the time these things turn out to be false alarms."

DIGGING IN to help improve Swan Creek, members of the Island Equipment Operators Association donated time and equipment on weekend for work on stream enhancement program for the Swan Lake Christmas Hill nature centre. Project involved giving straight-sided drainage ditch between Swan Lake and Douglas Street more natural appearance by curving stream channel. Shade trees will be planted along bank. Project is financed with grant from the Victoria Natural History Society.

Third lane for tunnel traffic

The provincial government is moving to ease the traffic flow through the George Massey tunnel under the south arm of the Fraser River.

A $2.7-million contract has been awarded to a Burnaby company to build an additional northbound lane from south of Steveston to Westminster Highway by using the existing median width. The tunnel will have three lanes for northbound traffic during the morning rush hour.

The government is not planning a similar system for southbound evening traffic because the northbound flow is too heavy at that time.

Construction is to begin immediately and is expected to be completed by the end of September.

TOWN TALK

The Turks invaded Victoria during the weekend but it was strictly a peaceful mission.

About 50 Turkish-Canadians came over on the ferry for an outing of the Turkish-Canadian Society.

Organizer Mickey Dean (remember his Turkish watermelon carving feats?) said they toured Butchart Gardens, the Provincial Museum and picnicked at Mt. Douglas park.

Dean, who lives in Victoria, says our town's Turkish population is large and growing. That's his puckish sense of humor. The city has four Turkish-Canadian families — a 33-per-cent gain over 1979 when there were only three.

If anyone out there cares, today marked the 108th sitting day of the current session of the legislature.

That ties it with 1975 for the second-longest session, which was later surpassed by the January-September gabfest which lasted for 133 interminable days back in 1977.

Should somebody maybe tell the pols that nobody's listening anymore?

In the West derogatory things often are heard about Canada's dual language policy, much of the criticism having to do with the millions spent teaching French to senior federal civil servants.

How refreshing to see the other side of the issue, when young people like Suzanne Lapointe, of Matane, Gaspe, and Bernard Landry, of Quebec City, cross the continent at their own expense for six weeks to learn conversational English.

They completed their language course at UVic last week and Monday hitch-hiked back to the mainland to follow their thumbs and put their new skill to the real test in California.

Landry, who is studying transport administration, took advantage of a student assistance program and got his $950 room, board and tuition paid for.

But Lapointe was ineligible because she was not attending school. Such was her enthusiasm she paid for the entire project from her own pocket — nearly $1,200.

Ron Armstrong has heard of bats in the belfry but didn't expect to find one of Dracula's playmates in his living room when he arrived home at 2 this morning.

He walked in to find his two cats Bunker and Rufus meowing and staring up mesmerised as the bat, with a wing span of about eight inches, circled round and round the room — and around Armstrong's legs.

Armstrong swiped at the bat with a broom a couple of times but the bat refused to leave.

Fearing he'd be bitten, he then tried phoning the police and the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The 4½-metre pole, started in Victoria, is being completed in public view by John Drummond, a Provincial Museum carver.

The pole is part of Vancouver's contribution to the 34th annual festival in addition to the Vancouver East Cultural Centre's performances of Billy Bishop Goes to War.

The museum also has an exhibit of traditional and contemporary West Coast Indian art at the month-long festival. The show, titled "The Legacy," will travel to Keighley, Yorkshire where it will be on display from Oct. 8 to Nov. 30 before returning to Canada.

In Kenya, bridegrooms in some tribes collected wild honey as a dowry sweetener, says Grace Mitoko

They made honey of a beer

By AB KENT

Pombe, the native beer of Kenya, is no longer the main reason for beekeeping among tribesmen of the equatorial bush.

Instead, says statuesque Grace Mitoko, her countrymen now are being organized to raise honey as a food staple and sweetener and there are tighter controls on brewing.

Mitoko, who has a bachelor's degree in agriculture, is in Canada on an exchange visit to learn more about apiculture and is among more than 150 Canadian and American delegates attending the third annual Western Apicultural Society conference at the University of Victoria.

Until Canada became involved with Kenya beekeepers through the Canadian International Development Agency in 1972, native honey was used chiefly for beer-making, for medicinal purposes and as a dowry sweetener.

Mitoko said a prospective bridegroom in some tribes might demonstrate his ardor for a girl by collecting wild honey in a quest that could take as much as two years.

Kenyans would also use honey as a cough syrup or, because of its high pH value, as an antiseptic.

In Kenya, until bee husbandry was adopted, swarms traditionally were traced to their natural hives in hollow logs or other hiding places.

Then to get the honey, tribesmen destroyed the bees.

Mitoko said this developed in the bees an instinct for protecting their hives and honey, resulting in an aggressive strain in some African varieties.

But the beekeepers of Kenya do not regard their bees as hazardous, even though crossbred African and Italian bees produced the so-called killer bees of Brazil.

"We like our bees. They are good," Mitoko said.

"But we have never called them killer bees. They are defensive."

Curiously, although Kenyans may show an allergy to bee venom just like people of the temperate zone, Mitoko said she has never heard of a fatal sting.

Mitoko has worked for five years for the Kenya government promoting apiculture by organizing groups of people interested in beekeeping.

After her two-month visit to Canada, she hopes to enrol at the University of Guelph for a diploma in apiculture.

Kenya had plenty of native bees and honey-making potential even before beekeeping as an agricultural industry was encouraged yet at the same time, was importing honey from more progressive places.

Originally, the government urged beekeeping on nomadic tribes as an alternative enterprise, but Mitoko said it is becoming popular across the country.

John Corner, B.C. agriculture department apiarist at Vernon, was in Kenya for CIDA in 1972-73, where he recruited staff, trained leaders, set up a beehive factory and a honey collection system.

He said up until then, most beekeepers sold their honey to brewers for the traditional pombe and because there were no other outlets, they had to accept the beer-makers' prices.

Today, Kenya's domestic honey has largely replaced imports.

Apprentice program rapped

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich's new apprenticeship program is just another opportunity for employers to get cheap labor, according to a spokesman from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The $14.4-million program is designed to provide B.C. industry with 1,400 badly needed skilled tradesmen.

The spokesman, who refused to be identified but said he'd gladly tell Heinrich what he was telling the Times, said the federal government has been running a similar program for a long time and it hasn't been working.

In the B.C. program, the government would spend $10,000 for each apprentice, subsidizing wages through the first two years of the four-year programs.

The IBEW spokesman speculated that the B.C. program would meet the same fate as the federal program — once the subsidy is gone, the employer lays off the apprentice.

Helmet reduced injuries

A 20-year-old motorcyclist is in satisfactory condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital with a compound fracture of the right leg received when he collided with a car on West Saanich Road Monday night.

But Saanich police said John Rodger, of 301-1576 Midguard, would have been more seriously hurt in the 11:25 p.m. mishap if he hadn't been wearing a helmet.

A police spokesman said Rodger was travelling in the 4800-block West Saanich Road when he collided with a car pulling out from a parking area beside Beaver Lake elementary school.

The driver of the car, Christopher Chambers, 19, of 2953 Colquitz, was not hurt.

In other accidents, two men escaped serious injury but caused a power outage when their car smashed into a B.C. Hydro pole at Sooke Road and Townsend.

RCMP said driver Sasha Smirnoff, 20, of 35A Lurline, and passenger Donald Sutherland, 22, of Vancouver, crawled out of the wreckage with only minor head cuts. They were treated at the scene by ambulance attendants.

The power pole was severed in the 12:50 a.m. mishap and it took crews nearly three hours to reconnect the line that serves most of Sooke.

A 31-year-old city man also escaped serious injury when his car overturned on Glanford near Vanalman at 2:52 a.m.

Saanich police said Gerald Champagne, 304-3255 Cook, was treated at Royal Jubilee for minor head cuts and released.

His car was demolished.

Fraser rejects big grant

The provincial government is not prepared to spend $150,000 on trial runs of a jetfoil service between Vancouver and Victoria, Transport Minister Alex Fraser said Monday.

Fraser had been requested by Flying Princess Transportation Co. for money to try a service between Oct. 1 and Nov. 14.

But the existing service between Victoria and Seattle has not been an overwhelming success.

Fraser said the request is being studied and a decision might be ready by the end of August but he is not prepared to spend the kind of money asked for.

Charles Barber (NDP — Victoria) said the company request, if accepted by the government, could result in a flood of demands for transportation subsidies.

"Once you offer a subsidy to one service, companies like Airwest and other airlines could begin asking why not them, too? It would be a good question," said Barber.

Rolf Bjornert, Flying Princess manager, had proposed that the jetfoil now running three times daily between Seattle and Victoria be taken off for the experiment.

Convention centre on move

Victoria city council's land use and zoning committee today recommended the Provincial Capital Commission be granted a development permit for the construction of the $9-million convention centre at the Wharf Street waterfront below Bastion Square.

George Giles, executive director of the capital commission, said construction will start about six weeks after city council approves the application for the development permit. That approval is expected at next week's council meeting.

Committee members this morning got their first view of the revised plans and model for the convention centre.

Committee chairman Ald. Bob Wright said he was impressed by the changes.

"The new design almost totally answers the concern voiced by the public," he said.

"I'm sure that a heritage committee of the not-too-distant future would protect the building if some future council wanted to tear it down," Wright added.

The changes in design made by Vancouver architect Paul Merrick in response to criticism from the community and some city council members, include lowering of the project's Wharf Street facade, increased public access, relocation of retail space, more landscaping and a general softening of the project's appearance.

"Although it's essentially the same building, there have been significant revisions," said Giles.

The complex will consist of two main halls to accommodate a variety of conferences, seminars, trade shows and cultural events.

The large hall at the north side of the site will have 16,000 square feet capable of seating 1,500 people at meetings and about 1,200 at a meal.

The south hall will have 10,000 square feet of exhibit space and seat about 900 people.

The city will build a 250-car undergound carpark at an estimated cost of $1.7 million.

Crunch looming on abortion

The crunch between the opposing factions will come when the Southern Vancouver Island Hospital Society holds its annual meeting to elect a new board.

The Canadian Abortion Rights Action League is circulating an information sheet headed: Stop the Pro-Life Takeover of Hospital Boards.

The Victoria-Pro Life Society sent the VGH board a letter in May, signed by more than 200 of its members, attacking the board's policy on abortion.

"All the pro-lifers now have to do is sign up a few hundred hospital society members before the deadline (Aug. 25)," the information sheet says.

"Remember, almost 800 Victorians voted for pro-life leader Philip Ney in the last federal election and that their recent city-wide mailing probably netted hundreds more."

The society's annual meeting will be held in the Newcombe Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 25 but membership forms and $2 registration fees must be in the office of Jim Fair, the hospital's executive-director before Aug. 26.

Spokesman Pat Jaworski claims the pro-lifers are one-issue orientated and not concerned with other community health issues, such as whether obstetrics and pediatrics should be removed from Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Margo Ney, co-chairman with Arla Rendle of the VPLS, says her group is also trying to get supporters to join the society and have a voice on who serves on the hospital board.

She denies pro-lifers are one-issue minded, saying they are as concerned about community health matters as other members of the community.

"The statements made in the fact sheet are just downright dishonest," Ney says.

She refers to the claim that two anti-abortion doctors stopped all abortions at the hospital.

"It was not until the hospital's medical staff took up arms and replaced the committee with a group of pro-choice doctors that abortions were done again at the hospital."

Ney says not all abortions were stopped during the six-month period but 27 were rejected out of 31 because there were no medical reasons to justify them.

She adds that it was not the medical staff that replaced the committee.

"It was the board. The medical staff had input but they don't do the appointing," she says.

Brett faces the same problems Carew had

By DAVE ANDERSON
Colonist-NY Times service

George Brett has blown his cover. For about a week his batting average had been slithering along around .390, like a water moccasin in a swamp. But with four hits Sunday and three more Monday he suddenly moved above the surface to .404 and now he can't hide any more. Also nursing a 30-game hitting streak, he's now a media event. Now the constant inquisitions might be more difficult for the Kansas City Royals' third baseman to cope with than the constant confrontation with opposing pitchers.

Not since 1941 when Ted Williams hit .406 for the Boston Red Sox has anybody batted over .400 in the major leagues.

But suddenly George Brett has a chance. All he has to do is average two hits in every five at bats for the rest of the season. The way he's hitting, that's the easy part. The hard part will be dealing with the writers, radio men, TV announcers and photographers who now will swarm around him as never before. Rod Carew could tell George Brett about that.

Three seasons ago Rod Carew, then with the Minnesota Twins, was batting over .400 in early July when the swarm began.

"I've never had anything like this before," he said that week. "I've even had to change my phone number at home."

In addition to the increased attention from the daily media, Time magazine, Sports Illustrated and Sport magazine did cover stories on him. Newsweek and People magazine had pieces on him. ABC News had TV camermen following him around. All that took time. Especially the magazine covers.

"I don't know how those models do it," Carew said. "The photographers want everything perfect."

When the ABC cameramen were at Metropolitan Stadium to shoot Carew as he jogged in the outfield before a game, he called to Roy Smalley, the Twins' shortstop, to run with him. Smalley was reluctant to intrude, but Carew eventually persuaded him to join him.

"All this publicity has been great for me," Carew explained, "but I don't want to bug the guys with it. That's why I wanted Roy to run with me. I want the guys to be as much a part of it as possible. I don't want the guys to think I'm separate from them."

Perhaps the swarm of newsmen prevented Rod Carew from hitting .400, perhaps not.

Shortly after the swarm began, Carew dropped under .400 and he skidded to .374 on August 26 before spurting to finish at .388 for his sixth of seven American League batting titles. He had 239 hits that year. Seven more and he would have batted .401.

Because he missed 35 games with thumb and ankle injuries, George Brett will need about 200 hits this season. From now on, every one will be documented.

Back in 1941 there were no TV cameras and no sports magazines covering Ted Williams over the last two months of the season. And back in 1941 a .400 hitter was not that unusual. Bill Terry had hit .401 for the New York Giants in 1930, Rogers Hornsby had hit .424, .403 and .401 for the St. Louis Cardinals during the '20s.

Now it has been nearly 40 years since baseball has had a .400 hitter. Now George Brett has a chance to accomplish something special.

"I've never been this hot this long," he said over the weekend. "I'm just going to try to keep telling myself that I'm hot. The thing I don't want to do is put pressure on myself. But it's hard not to think about what I'm hitting. My batting average is in the papers every day and every time I go up to hit in Royals Stadium, it's up there out in center field on the scoreboard that's as high as a six-story building."

But with the Royals far in front in the American League West, the usual pressure of the divisional race is virtually nil.

"With their big lead," says Charlie Lau, the New York Yankees batting coach who earlier was George Brett's tutor with the Royals, "if somebody told George to go hit .400, he could do it."

With their big lead, the Royals might clinch their division with at least two weeks remaining in the regular-season schedule.

"If we clinch early," George Brett says, "it might help to keep me out against some pitchers that give me trouble. But on the other hand, I don't want to backdoor it. I don't want to do anything to make people think I didn't earn it."

If he's still got a chance to bat .400 going into the last day of the season, the 27-year-old left handed hitter would prefer to be slightly below .400 rather than above it.

"I think it would be easier to be hitting below it and go for it rather than to be hitting above it and try to protect it," he says. "Before the last game of the season I'd like to be hitting .398 with a right hander who throws a lot of fastballs starting for the other team."

And if George Brett is hitting .398 before that last game, it will be because he has been able to handle the swarm.

Organ tops point milestone as Riders wallop Alouettes

OTTAWA (CP) — Gerry Organ kicked six field goals and quarterback Jordan Case threw two touchdown passes as Ottawa Rough Riders defeated Montreal Alouettes 33-11 in Canadian Football League action Monday night.

Organ's field goald of 40, 29, 30, 43, 45 and 26 yards, plus two converts and a 63-yard single give him 1,008 career points, making him only the third CFL player to score more than 1,000.

Case threw a four-yard pass to flanker Bruce Walker and a 34-yarder to running-back Richard Crump on a broken play for the Ottawa touchdowns.

David Green scored Montreal's only major on a one-yard run in the fourth quarter. Don Sweet kicked an 18-yard field goal and singles of 54 and 51 yards to round out Alouettes' scoring.

The win, before 29,994 fans, the largest Ottawa crowd of the year, puts the Riders in first place in the Eastern Football Conference with eight points, two more than Hamilton Tiger-Cats and Toronto Argonauts. Montreal is last with four.

Case, a rookie who was cut at the end of training camp this year and recalled when regular quarterback Condredge Holloway was injured two weeks ago, erased any doubts about his ability as he blended passing and running to keep the Ottawa offence in high gear all night.

Last week, Case came off the bench to guide Ottawa to a 27-17 come-from-behind win over the Alouettes in Montreal.

Rookie defensive back Mark Philip sparked the Riders' defence with an interception, fumble recovery and blocked punt.

The blocked punt, on Montreal's first offensive series, set up the first Organ field goal while his recovery of a misdirected lateral pass by quarterback Gerry Dattilio set up the second Organ three-pointer.

Crump had one of his best games in a Rider uniform, gaining 138 yards on 20 carries and catching three passes for 55 yards. Top Montreal rusher was Green with 48 yards on 13 carries.

Montreal managed 17 first downs, compared with 13 for Ottawa, but the Als had a total offence of only 275 yards, compared with 283 for the Riders.

Case completed seven of his nine pass attempts for 125 yards while Dattilio was good on 15 of 30 for 240 yards. However, two of Dattilio's throws were intercepted.

Montreal tight-end Chuck McMann gained 97 yards on six receptions to lead the Als in that department.

It appeared at first that Case was unable to finish Ottawa offensive drives and had to settle for Organ field goals but in the second quarter he found slotback Peter Stenerson wide open for a 38-yard gain that put the ball on the Montreal four-yard line and set up the Walker touchdown.

Then, in the third quarter, he passed 28 yards to fullback Jim Reid before scrambling out of the pocket and throwing 34 yards to Crump for the other major.

Budgets (and Bates) will live on in history

An era ended Sunday and softball teams across the nation must have drawn a collective sigh of relief as Victoria Budgets bowed out of the national men's softball playdowns for the first time in the last 10 years and only the second time in the past 11.

That's quite a record of accomplishment in sport, especially at the national level, and all members of Budgets, and Victoria Bates before them, have every right to feel proud of that standard of play and the many thrills they have given Victoria fans over the years.

One world, one Pan-American and four national titles came to Victoria in that time and it's unlikely that any other club will ever match that record.

It's unfortunate how the Budgets lost in the rain and mud on the mainland, and with only one run finally telling the entire story of the rain-drenched tournament. New Westminster scored in the top of the fifth inning. Budgets didn't in their bottom half of the inning. Then the rains came, harder than ever. The game was called and the tournament never got started again.

The committee-in-charge, faced with a difficult task, made the ruling naming New Westminster, which was unbeaten at the time, the new provincial champion. Budgets, Vancouver and Port Alberni were still alive in the losers' half of the draw and, in this humble view, it was far from being a satisfactory way of deciding a champion. Albeit, good luck to New West. They should carry B.C. colors proudly.

Meanwhile, the crowds continue to come and bet their money in ever-increasing amounts on the trotters at Sandown Raceway. And going into tonight's program, the 54th of the 65-day meeting, the total wagered to date is $6,319,401. That is just $79,700 less than the $6,399,101 that was wagered on the entire 65-day program last year.

The daily average this year is $119,401, a healthy increase over last season, and the per-race average about $12,000. Last year the daily average was $98,829. General manager Jim Keeling, Sr., also noted that Victorians apparently like the introduction of the daily double, which took place last week, but they still like the triactor more.

On Saturday, $33,669 was pushed through the mutuels in the triactor pool and that's only slightly under the record of $33,669 set on July 1. Keeling also said that there will be afternoon racing on Thursday and Friday of the final week, starting at 1:30 p.m. And incidentally, the Hollingsworth driving at Stampede Park is not the Grant Hollingsworth who drives at Sandown, but his brother Pat.

And what price a claim in racing? One never knows. And Victoria thoroughbred fans must have gotten quite a charge out of the PNE President's Cup race at Exhibition Park Saturday as Paladin came home a winner. Remember Paladin?

That is the horse that was acquired in California by the Vancouver Island Good Times Stable last season and great things were expected of him. Well, he started well enough, but then bowed a tendon, was sent to the farm and operated on last fall. This year, it was back to the races for the patched-up Paladin in the $10,000 claiming division. After three straight victories, Paladin was claimed for $12,500 by his former trainer, Victoria's Wayne Isbister, for the Ho Choy stable. And what a claim that has been. Since then he has been moving steadily up the claiming ladder of success and has lost but one race in nine starts and that in a photo to Conciliator at the $25,000 level.

Saturday he was in over his head in the handicap division for the first time with all the other starters having won at least one stakes event. Although he was "given a chance" as the saying goes, Isbister didn't even bother to blow him out for the event and didn't even give rider Del Rycroft any special advice. However, that's racing.

Tonight in sports

Lacrosse, harness racing and softball highlight the local sports scene tonight.

In lacrosse, Victoria Shamrocks face New Westminster Salmonbellies in the opening game of the best-of-seven Western Association playoff final at 8 in Memorial Arena.

Harness racing action at Sandown Raceway gets underway with a parade to the post at 5:20.

And, in softball, Mears Realty and Victoria Athletics square off in the fourth game of the best-of-five Heywood Men's League playoff semi-final at 6:30 in Heywood Avenue Park. Mears leads the series, 2-1.

Television

Channels 2 and 6 will telecast the Canadian Football League game between Calgar Stampeders and Edmonton Eskimos at 6:30.

Rocks host bellies in WLA finals tonight

First game of the Western Lacrosse Association final series between Victoria Shamrocks and New Westminster Salmonbellies will be played tonight at Memorial Arena.

Second game in the best-of-seven series will be Thursday in New Westminster, with the third Saturday in Victoria and the fourth Aug. 25 in New Westminster.

Further games, if necessary, would be played Aug. 27 in Victoria, Aug. 28 in New Westminster and Aug. 29 in Victoria.

The WLA champion will meet the winner of the Ontario Lacrosse Association in the Mann Cup final at the home of the western champion, with games scheduled for Sept. 2, 3, 5 and 6. Further games, if needed, would be Sept. 8, 9 and 11.

Victoria advanced to the WLA final by defeating Vancouver Burrards 4-2 in the semi-finals, while New Westminster got past Coquitlam 4-3 after the league-champion Adanacs won the first three games of the series.

Blues' barrage sinks Senators

SALEM, Ore. — Victoria Blues launched a hitting barrage against Salem Senators while opposing pitchers suffered control problems in Northwest League baseball action Monday.

The result: Blues utilized 14 hits and 13 bases on balls to chalk up a 15-3 victory — their 19th in 25 games.

Rod Murphy, who had two hits in four trips to the plate, started things off for Blues in the five-run first inning with a bases-loaded double to supply three of his four runs-batted-in.

Paul Stevens went four-for-five, including three doubles, to drive in three runs; Paul Kirsch also had three RBIs and Ritchie Archie went two-for-four and drove in two runs.

Victoria was error-free in the contest while Salem committed three bobbles and was limited to six hits by winning-pitcher Ken Klacza and reliever Eric Snider, who came in during the sixth inning. Klacza's record is now 10-3.

Blues, who are two games behind first-place Bellingham Mariners in the Northern Division, face Senators here again tonight and take a rare day off Wednesday before returning to Victoria to face Gray's Harbor Loggers in a doubleheader Thursday starting at 7 in Royal Athletic Park.

Canada ties Australia

SEOUL (CP) — Canada tied Australia 11-11 on the final day of an international baseball tournament Tuesday, finishing with one win, two losses and two ties.

Dave Montanari of Windsor, Ont., belted a grand slam home run in fourth, his fifth home run in the five-day tournament.

The United States finished atop the standings with five wins.

Cables advance

BURNABY (CP) — Burnaby Cablevision defeated the visiting Coquitlam Junior Adanacs 13-8 Monday night to win a Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League best-of-seven semi-final series 4-1.

Yanks lead but footsteps get louder

The series is over and New York Yankees are still in first place. But they're hearing footsteps — loud ones.

The Yankees' lead in the East Division of baseball's American League was cut to 2½ games Monday night when they stranded the potential tying and winning runs in scoring position in the ninth inning and lost to Baltimore Orioles, 6-5.

The game ended an 11-day stretch for the Yankees in which they played the second-place Orioles eight times. They won just two of those meetings, and even manager Dick Howser acknowledged that New York has its work cut out for it the rest of the way.

Elsewhere in the American League, George Brett and Kansas City Royals kept rolling along, dumping Texas Rangers 6-3. Milwaukee Brewers stayed in the East Division hunt with a 12-5 win over Detroit Tigers, while Minnesota Twins defeated California Angels 8-3. Cleveland and Chicago split a doubleheader, the Indians winning the opener 4-2 and the White Sox the nightcap 7-2.

Since the all-star break, the Orioles are 26-12. Since July 26, they're 17-5. And for August, the defending AL champions have lost just four times while winning 13.

The Baltimore-New York series is finished for the season, with the Orioles winning 7-6. So Baltimore will have to hope for some help from some other teams.

The crowd of 51,528 pushed the total for the five games to 253,636, the largest attendance ever for a series in the major leagues.

Nina edges rival

NEW YORK (AP) — Argentina and third-seeded Canada were tied 3-3 when darkness suspended play at the International Young Masters team tennis championship for players 21-years and under.

The teams split the singles matches. Stephane Bonneau of Quebec City beating Argentine Hugo Chapacus 6-4, 6-3 and Nina Bland of Victoria downing Patricia Gomez 6-3, 4-6, 6-3. But Argentine Robert Arguello beat Bill Cowan of Toronto 1-6, 7-5, 6-3 and Liliana Guissani defeated Wendy Barlow of Victoria 6-3, 6-2.

Canada won the women's doubles, while Argentina took the men's doubles, setting the stage for a deciding seventh match, mixed doubles, which will be played today.

Meanwhile, No. 1 Australia, Israel and Mexico scored first-round victories.

The Australia team of John Fitzgerald, Greg Whitecross, Debbie Freeman and Sue Leo blanked Yugoslavia 6-0. Israel was a 4-2 victor over the Republic of China and Mexico beat Ireland 5-1, winning all four singles matches.

Sacher Perkis and Eylon Sinai scored singles triumphs for Israel and then combined to post a 6-4, 6-3 victory over Chun-Nan Lin and Chung-Hsing Liu in doubles.

Enrique Haro, Manuel Ruiz, Marie Elena Llamas and Andriana Ruiz all took singles matches for Mexico.

Kicks clinch spot in playoffs

Ricardo Alonso, Ace Ntsoelengoe and Alan Willey each scored two goals as Minnesota Kicks bombed Philadelphia Fury 6-1 Monday night to wrap up a North American Soccer League playoff spot.

The victory gives the Kicks a 16-5 record and 145 points to clinch at least second place, two points behind Central Division-leading Dallas Tornado in the National Conference.

The Kicks have won 10 of their last 12 games and five straight. It was the the third straight loss for the Fury, 10-21.

The Kicks closed out their 16-game regular season before a crowd of 21,647, an average of 18,278.

All about pro-ams, opens and Island Cup matches

Earl Davies' lineup has a new look but Gorge Vale will still be the defenders when golf teams from throughout B.C. hit Vancouver Capilano for the provincial Crown Life Pro-Am final Friday.

Davies, Dave Donaldson, Al Shumka and Gil Wong represented B.C. in the 1979 Western Canada finals. This year, Al Patterson and Jack Ramsay have succeeded Wong and Shumka in qualifying for the higher handicap positions. Donaldson may be back, be he has to play off this week with Al Curran for the fourth spot.

The other teams from the Lower Island zone:

Colwood: Bob Hogarth, Hugh Sim, Stan Crocker and John Plant.
Uplands: Don Billsborough, Norm Wallace, Willie Eng and Harry Zaruk
Victoria: Mike Parker, Doug Munro, John Campbell, Ian Campbell.

With the results of one tournament still to come, changes could occur in the makeup of the 1980 teams that will battle for the Winspear Trophy in the Island Cup matches at Glen Meadows next month.

The Mt. Brenton Open, scheduled Sept. 6-7, provides the final qualifying points that determine the 10-man amateur and professional teams.

Amateurs: Mick 595; Grant Milliken of Gorge Vale 415; Sandy Harper of Nanaimo 412½, Don Gowan of Glen Meadows 390; Donaldson 352½, Stu Holroyd of Gorge Vale 315; Jamie Harper of Nanaimo 262½; Ross Logan of Nanaimo 260; Ian Harper of Nanaimo 247½; Brian DeGirolamo of Gorge Vale 245½; John Russell of Glen Meadows 237½; Ed Beauchemin of Glen Meadows 192½; Aren Frederickson of Nanaimo and Brian Sluggett of Glen Meadows 172½, and Jim Young of Nanaimo 165.

From a physical standpoint, B.C.'s Willingdon Cup team isn't going to frighten anyone at the Canadian Amateur in Halifax this week. Our guys are going to let their talents do the talking.

The average height of the team, defending the interprovincial crown, is under five-foot-seven and the average weight is just under 155 pounds, without spikes.

Still, Doug Roxburgh, Dick Zokol and Rick Gibson (all 5-7) and Sandy Harper (5-6) are capable of keeping the team trophy on the West Coast.

BRIEFLY: The committee working on a mystery guest for next month's B.C. Open at Glen Meadows may have stumbled into a temporary roadblock because of the actors' strike in the U.S. . . The strike, setting back all work schedules, leaves future commitments up in the air . . . Mentioned most prominently as the mystery guest is Jim Garner, who does love his golf . . . And going by reports from those who have played the McTavish Road course in recent days, Glen Meadows will be in its best shape ever.

After the Open, 25-27 pros will remain in town to play in an $8,000 pro-am at Victoria Club . . . Scheduled Sept. 16, it is for the Oak Bay members, with a waiting list already . . . Governor General Ed Schreyer, obviously slipping away for a few moments of relaxation, popped up unexpectedly on the first tee at Oak Bay at 5 p.m. Saturday and managed to play 16 holes with surprised club members Alex McCabe and Lyle Robertson . . . Nobody kept score, or so they said.

Top seed pressed

WEST VANCOUVER (CP) — Temperamental Martin Wostenholme had to overcome his own boredom and the game efforts of unseeded Bruno Clermont to record a tough first-round win Monday night in the Canadian national junior tennis championships.

The top-seeded Wostenholme, a loser last week to John McEnroe in the Canadian open in Toronto, had his hands full when Clermont stubbornly returned most of Wostenhome's array of shots.

Wostenholme, now living in Switzerland but playing tennis out of Ottawa, won the lengthy match 7-5, 6-4 in the men's under-18 division from Clermont, the Laval, Que., shotmaker who won the under-16 title a year ago.

Second-seeded Glenn Michibata of Toronto was much smoother in his match with Anders Lindberg, also of Toronto, winning 7-6, 6-3.

Doug Burke, the Jamaican-born No. 3 seed now living in Toronto, won his first match 6-2, 6-4 over Patrick Merrigan of Delta while fourth-seeded Laird Dunlop of Victoria got past Rick Hunter of West Vancouver 6-3, 6-2.

Vikettes get tie with Iowa

University of Victoria Vikettes and a touring side from the University of Iowa battled to a 1-1 deadlock Monday in an exhibition women's field hockey match at UVic.

Sara Angus scored the lone goal for Vikettes.

The visiting side is also scheduled to face an over-30 team in another exhibition tonight at 6.

Young quarterbacks lead Dolphins over Seahawks

By The Canadian Press

Two young quarterbacks, battling for the No. 3 position with Miami Dolphins, turned a pair of second-half turnovers into fourth-quarter touchdowns Monday night as the Dolphins defeated Seattle Seahawks 24-7 in National Football League pre-season action.

The Dolphins, 2-0 in pre-season play, scored their go-ahead touchdown after Glenn Blackwood intercepted a Dave Krieg pass late in the third quarter. Quarterback Guy Benjamin then marched the Dolphins 87 yards in eight plays, including a 30-yard pass to Jimmy Cefalo, before scoring on a one-yard rollout late in the third quarter to break a 7-7 deadlock.

Then it was Dave Woodley's turn. He directed the Dolphins to their third touchdown of the night after Ron Hill recovered a fumble by the Seattle's Gary Carr on the Seahawks 33. Woodley teamed with Elmer Bailey on a 29-yard pass completion and, just 1:23 after Benjamin's TD, Bob Torrey scored on a four-yard run with 4:04 gone in the final quarter.

Woodley then guided the Dolphins to the Seattle 22 and Uwe von Schamann kicked a 39-yard field goal with 1:21 remaining.

In other games, Washington Redskins beat Cleveland Browns 12-3, while Kansas City Chiefs defeated Minnesota Vikings 24-10.

Don Strock, battling veteran Bob Griese for the first-string quarterbacking job with the Dolphins, did not play Monday. Neither did Jim Zorn and Steve Myer, Seattle's top two quarterbacks who are both sidelined with injuries.

Early in the third quarter, Seattle staged a goal-line stand after the Dolphins got to the Seahawks' one-yard line. Delvin Williams got nowhere in two tries and Steve Howell was held to no gain on a fourth-and-one try.

Mark Moseley kicked four field goals and Joe Theismann completed 10 of 21 passes for 113 yards as Washington beat Cleveland. Moseley's field goals came from 21, 32, 28 and 39 yards as the Redskins raised their pre-season record to 2-0 and sent the Browns down to their second defeat in as many exhibition games.

Reserve quarterback Bill Kenney threw two third-quarter touchdown passes and Kansas City held Minnesota to 49 yards rushing in the Chiefs' victory.

Courageous limps into trials

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Ted Turner and his crew of the trouble-plagued yacht, Courageous, limp into final trials this week with the worst record of the three U.S. yachts vying to defend the America's Cup.

On Monday, the bow of Courageous was damaged in a collision with Russell Long's yacht, Clipper, during a practice session. The mishap was only the latest for Courageous this summer.

"We have had all the bad luck but the vibes are good now," Turner said. "We're going out there to do the very best we can."

Race officials said he will be the odd man out today when trials begin, giving him time to repair the damage.

Turner, the America's Cup defender in 1977, has a record of six wins and 20 losses.

San Diego skipper Dennis Conner and his yacht, Freedom, were leading the U.S. field with a 31-2 record, while Clipper stood at 8-23 going into final trials under the eye of the sponsoring New York Yacht Club.

The four foreign challenge candidates continue their semifinal best-of-seven series off Newport today.

The favored yacht, Australia, beat Swedish yacht, Sverige, by two minutes and 59 seconds Monday, and France 3 defeated Britain's Lionheart by 1:36 in moderate 10 knot winds on Rhode Island Sound.

The scorecard so far reads Australia 2-0; France 2-1; Lionheart 1-2, and Sverige 0-2.

The two victors will meet in a best-of-seven series starting Aug. 29 to decide which yacht will try to break the U.S. grip on sailing's most coveted prize.

The defender and challenger will meet in a best-of-seven series beginning Sept. 16.

Turner, who complained last month that Conner's crew had more practice time and better sails, has had some bad luck since defender competition began in mid-June.

During July observation trials on Rhode Island Sound, the six-year-old Courageous cracked a boom, then broke a mast a few days later. Last week, Clipper hit the stern of Couageous during a practice start, bending the mast and rendering it useless.

Clipper agreed to allow Turner use of the 12-metre's spare mast, but the Courageous crew had only two days to tune the spar before the start of final trials.

Bad luck hasn't been Turner's sole problem. The Atlanta sports and television tycoon drew the wrath of Conner and was excused from a final day of racing in July trials for taking Australia's tactician, Ben Lexcen, aboard for a race against Freedom.

Conner was disturbed that a potential competitor got a good look at Freedom in action.

Clipper, with Long at the helm, has been testing new sails and may make a stronger showing in the final trials.

Freedom's crew also has been developing and testing new sails.

Spurs give Gervin rich new contract

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — San Antonio Spurs and the National Basketball Association's leading scorer, George Gervin, have broken a summer-long stalemate and reached an agreement under which Gervin may play out his career with the National Basketball Association team.

Club president Angelo Drossos said they had agreed on a renegotiated contract carrying a substantial increase in salary and a prizefight-type bonus package that would compensate Gervin for each victory above 35 each season.

The contract was believed to ensure Gervin a salary somewhere between the $650,000 a year final offer by the team and the $1 million Gervin said he wanted to provide security for his family.

Weaver Boldirev

Weaver called before MacPhail

AMERICAN LEAGUE president Lee MacPhail said Monday he had talked with Baltimore Orioles manager Earl Weaver about Weaver's run-in with the umpires during Saturday night's baseball game against New York Yankees.

MacPhail said he had also watched films of the rhubarb but had not discussed the incident with the umpiring crew which was handling Monday's finale of a five-game series between the Orioles and the Yankees.

It will probably be late today or Wednesday before a decision is made on whether to fine or suspend Weaver for the dirt-kicking argument, the league president said.

IVAN BOLDIREV has ended his free-agent status and signed on for three more years as a Vancouver Canuck. The 30-year-old centre who scored 16 goals in 27 games with the NHL team after being traded from Atlanta, had decided to test his value in the open market at the end of last season.

MIRED IN FIFTH place in baseball's National League East, St. Louis Cardinals dismissed general manager John Claiborne on Monday. Claiborne said his failure to sign top free agents and injuries to key players led to the team's poor season and his dismissal.

OLYMPIC CHAMPIONS Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett will run against each other in the Golden Mile at Crystal Palace in London next Monday.

Ovett, the Olympic 800-metre champion, and Coe, Olympic 1,500 champion, have met only four times.

Their first meeting was in a junior cross country, then at the 1978 European championships where Ovett was second and Coe third over 800 metres. The last two times they raced was in the Moscow Olympics.

Among those who have confirmed their intention to run in the class mile are former world record holder John Walker of New Zealand, Filbert Bayi of Tanzania, Thomas Wessinghage of West Germany and Eamonn Coghlan of Ireland.

DETROIT TIGERS centre fielder Kirk Gibson's rookie year has come to an end. Jim Campbell, general manager of the American League baseball club, said Gibson, 23, will decide within the next few days whether to undergo surgery to repair a tear in the cartilage of his left wrist. The alternative is to put the wrist in a cast for a prolonged period.

CEDRIC MAXWELL, smiling and joking, signed Monday a four-year National Basketball Association contract with Boston Celtics, ending weeks of negotiations and rumors he would leave the team. The 6-foot-8, three-year veteran — he has led the NBA in field goal percentage — became a free agent at the end of last season.

EVONNE GOOLAGONG CAWLEY withdrew from the $100,000 Women's Cup on Monday because of a recurring back injury. Goolagong, who lost in the quarter-finals of the Canadian Open to Kathy Jordan last week, plans to return home to Hilton Head Island, N.C., and visit her physician.

JOCKEYS Darrel McHargue and Reuben Hernandez were listed in fair condition at Saratoga, N.Y., Hospital with injuries suffered in a four-horse spill that killed two horses in the ninth race Saturday. A hospital spokesman said McHargue fractured his right collarbone while Hernandez suffered a moderately severe neck strain and contusions of the right knee.

Sports club members capture top honors

Frank Smith drove a Mini-Cooper "S" to a first place in the "D" improved sedan class and was followed in order by John Erith and his wife Marilyn Smith, both driving the same type of car.

Smith also placed second in the "F" sports racing class.

Ian McRae, in a Terripin, was first in "E" sports racing while Gordie Munroe chalked up a win in the Formula Atlantic class in his Chevron B-34.

Second-place finishes were also recorded by Andrew Hagen, driving a Brabham BT-29 in the Formula "B" class, and Larry Sandham, driving a Mini-Cooper "S" in the "C" improved sedan class.

★ Four Island gymnasts make up team

Vancouver Island supplied all of the four-member contingent selected from British Columbia to attend the national gymnastic training camp in Orillia, Ont.

Heather Cameron of Cobble Hill, Susan Reid of Nanaimo and Valerie Hansen and Rachel Turner, both of Port Alberni, leave Thursday for the seven-day camp.

Camosun strike vote Thursday

A strike vote will be taken Thursday by the support staff at Camosun College.

The vote follows the collapse of mediation efforts to resolve a contract dispute which centres around wages.

The 155 members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 2081, are seeking a one-year agreement, with a 12-per-cent wage increase retroactive to April 1 and another three-per-cent increase on Oct. 1.

The college board is offering a two-year agreement with a 9.5-per-cent increase in each year plus a cost-of-living adjustment clause.

Union spokesman Pete Driedger said today a meeting will be held with the board prior to the strike vote to clarify details about the COLA clause.

He said if the board's explanation is satisfactory, a confrontation could possibly be avoided.

If the union is not satisfied with the COLA, the vote will be taken and mediator Peter Dowding asked to withdraw from the dispute, paving the way for a strike.

Board chairman Janet Baird said Monday in a written statement neither the college nor the community has the funds to accept the union's demands.

"The present (board) offer exceeds the seven-per-cent government inflation allowance and in itself will require curtailment of service to the community," she said.

Baird said the board hopes the impasse can be resolved by further negotiations or some type of mediation-arbitration.

$20,000 damage in house fire

Fire Monday night caused about $20,000 damage to a house at 6991 East Saanich Road.

The fire started about 7:30 p.m. and was confined to an attic bedroom. There was a fair amount of smoke damage to the rest of the two-storey house, a Central Saanich fire department spokesman said.

Before the judge

The first American fishermen of the season charged locally with fishing in Canadian waters appeared in Victoria provincial court Monday.

Richard Grinnell of Port Townsend, Wash. and David Clarke, of Nordland, Wash., blamed the Sunday night storm for pushing them inside the Canadian boundary near Jordan River early Monday morning.

They pleaded guilty to separate charges before Judge Harold Alder.

Grinnell said he was asleep when his gillnetter was taken across the border by the quick-moving tide which had earlier been held back by the storm's strong westerly winds.

He was fined $500 and forfeited the catch in the net, which federal fisheries officers valued at $493.45.

Clarke said he had tangled his net and the fast tide brought the crippled vessel into Canadian waters.

The judge said Clarke case was slightly different and fined him only $250. He also ordered forfeiture of the catch, valued at $216.85.

A Metchosin couple was fined a total of $1,600 after pleading guilty to five charges each of failing to file income tax returns.

Merle Rimmer, 641 Happy Valley, had been given 30 days — after notification in April — to file his returns for the years 1975 through 1978.

Rimmer presented a letter to the court from his accountants explaining the returns are being completed but Alder told him the charges before the court had nothing to do with any subsequent income tax owing.

Rimmer was fined $200 on each count as was his wife, Heather, who also pleaded guilty to failing to file returns for the same period.

Mrs. Rimmer told the court they had no income because her husband, a self-employed plasterer, was unable to work because of injuries received in an accident with a horse.

Although they were charged separately, the judge said Rimmer could pay his fine over four months. His wife could pay over the following four months.

It was singing to a 31-year-old Sooke man but is considered causing a disturbance by shouting in the Criminal Code.

The police were attracted to the Lower Causeway on April 24 by shouting and saw about 10 people around street musician Gordon Ansley who was subsequently found to be intoxicated.

Ansley was to go to trial Oct. 7 but changed his plea to guilty.

His lawyer told the court the accused was singing rather boisterously and did shout several yahoos which attracted police.

Alder suspended sentence on the charge and placed Ansley on three months probation to include nine hours of community service work in the form of entertaining handicapped groups.

"Try to keep it down, next time," he warned Ansley who appeared in court carrying his guitar.

Robert Donnelly, 30, was to appear in court again today to elect method of trial on a burglary charge laid after the James Bay Safeway was broken into overnight Sunday.

Crossroads assignments

Three Victorians will leave Sept. 2 for Third World countries to live with local families and work on community self-help projects for four months.

Laura Porcher and David Seymour will go to Botswana while Chris Fitzpatrick will travel to Bangladesh.

They are travelling through Canadian Crossroads International, a non-profit international development and educational organization.

Saanich switch: developer wins residents' okay

Developer Gordon Denford won approval Monday night to erect an apartment building in the midst of a single-family residential neighborhood of Saanich — and got local residents to come out and support him.

Council voted 5-2 to rezone a vacant parcel of property on Glenora Place in the Lake Hill area from townhouse to medium density apartment, after hearing that neighbors almost unanimously are behind the 28-unit condominium project pitched at pensioners.

"I'm impressed by the fact that the immediate neighborhood are in favor of the project," said Ald. Howard Sturrock.

Denford outlined his plans to put up a $2.6-million four-storey apartment block on the steeply sloping lot next to Playfair Park where units would sell for $90,000 to $110,000.

As single-family lots, only four awkwardly placed parcels could be carved out of the property, which is landlocked on three sides, he said. A townhouse proposal was defeated some years ago when homeowners organized a petition.

Denford said the project would blend with the neighborhood's social makeup, as more than 50 per cent of the residents are retired. Nearly three-quarters of the property will remain open space and groups of Garry oak trees will be preserved.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Moore, 3813 Quadra, spoke in favor of the development and Mrs. Peter Bridgewood, 1011 Glenora, who organized the 200-plus names on the petition last time redevelopment was proposed, also supported it.

"We would like the property to be undeveloped but that is impossible. We think this is the best use for the property. We're as a whole street for it."

Alf Pendray, former owner of the property, and a nearby resident of 3825 Quadra, also backed Denford's rezoning application, which had the endorsement of the Saanich municipal planning staff and the advisory planning commission.

Jack Fry, 1083 Lodge, spoke against the proposal. He said traffic is already bad on Quadra and left turns off Glenora will be difficult.

"You're going to have lost of accidents," he said.

"We have a good, solid residential area up in Lake Hill and we want to keep it that way."

Jacob Lieberherr, 1121 Palmer, said Denford's project was a nice building "but it doesn't belong on the end of Glenora."

"I don't think the alternatives have been given a fair shot. That is totally a residential area."

Ald. Sandy Noel said: "It's going to be a class-type of apartment and I don't think there are going to be the traffic problems some people fear."

Ald. Mary Casilio and Bob Cameron opposed rezoning on grounds it would aggravate traffic problems.

HILL
. . . report Monday

Access rights checked

Central Saanich Mayor Dave Hill said Monday he is concerned that a proposed marina at Saanichton Bay may violate the access rights of the Tsawout Indian band.

Hill said in an interview he is looking into the problem of access rights to the bay, and will report to council next Monday.

The 400-berth marina is being proposed by Saanichton Marina Ltd.

"One of my main concerns is that the proposed marina site may violate the riparian rights of the band," Hill said.

"Riparian rights allow waterfront owners access to the water, and you could argue that the proposed site would partially block the band's access to the bay."

Hill said his verbal report will also deal with the project's potential effect on Sandhill Creek, which flows into the bay.

"My other concern at this point is that the proposed site will require dredge fill to be placed near the mouth of Sandhill Creek to extend the parking lot. This will be of concern to fisheries.

"I will suggest in my report that before our approval is given to the proposed marina, these concerns should be looked into."

The Tsawout band announced its opposition to the project earlier this month.

Hill said he will fight for the band if the opposition is based on facts.

"I won't fight if it's based on emotionalism," he said.

Hill said the provincial government will have the final responsibility for approving or not approving the project.

An earlier marina proposal by Saanichton Marina Ltd. was rejected in 1975 by the then NDP provincial government.

That project was also opposed by the Tsawout band.

Land donors get their fence

A final deal on access to Prospect Lake's steep and wooded southeast shore was approved Monday night by Saanich council.

Aldermen agreed to give the donor of a public access strip whatever kind of fence he wants to keep out trespassers.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dorken have given the municipality a 15-to-20 foot wide strip from Stevens Road down to the water — under threat of expropriation — and in return council has agreed to fence the 1,400-foot right-of-way.

Solicitor Chris Nation told aldermen he thought he had worked out a deal with Dorken to put up high-quality chain link fence for the first 150 feet at each end, then a lesser grade of material in between.

But Mrs. Dorken made a last-minute appearance before council Thursday night and asked for the entire length to be built of chain link fence — at a cost estimated by assistant engineer George Gunn of between $11,000 and $15,000.

She said they had changed their minds. A five-foot-high fence of this type would better deter vandals and trespassers, she said.

Acting mayor Ald. Geoff Vantreight asked if council wanted to table the matter until Saanich knew how much the fence would cost, but aldermen voted to give the Dorkens a fence of their choosing in view of their generosity in donating the land.

They also voted to rescind last week's motion authorizing expropriation proceedings against them.

Saanich originally neglected to obtain public access rights when the southeast corner of the lakeshore was subdivided, and residents who have traditionally crossed the property to get to the water raised a fuss about the mistake.

No break for bank

Saanich council Monday night rejected a plea from the Royal Bank of Canada — one of the country's largest corporations — for an $800 break on missing the July 2 deadline for paying property taxes.

The Colwood branch of the Royal Bank was late with a cheque for 1980 Saanich municipal property taxes on behalf of a number of Saanich residents and asked for special consideration because the envelope was actually postmarked a day before the deadline.

Taxes not paid by July 2 were subject to a five per cent penalty. It cost the Colwood branch $811.73 which was paid a month ago.

Two weeks later council got a letter from Mrs. P.B. Stevenson, senior loans officer of the branch, asking for a waiver.

She said the items were placed in the branch mail June 27 but weren't placed in the postal box until June 30, the date the envelope was marked by the bank's postal meter. Because of the holiday weekend, it didn't arrive at Saanich municipal hall until July 3.

Council refused to consider the matter and endorsed without debate a recommendation from controller R.F. Broughton to ignore the bank's plea.

"The payment was received late and this could have been avoided with a little more care and attention," he said in a memo.

Aldermen back youngsters over elderly in street closure

Kids looking for a safe place to play won over a delegation of elderly residents as Saanich council Monday night reversed last week's decision and voted 5-3 to close off Rutledge Street at Cloverdale.

Ralph White, 8-3274 Rutledge, led two families with several children in a successful appeal of council's 4-3 vote Aug. 5 to repeal a seven-year-old street closure bylaw. On July 28, by an identical vote in committee, aldermen supported closure.

White said the intersection of Cloverdale and Rutledge, in an area with many apartments and families who have small children, is extremely dangerous. The street closure would enlarge and make safe a playground at the corner.

Now, some parents forbid their children to walk down Rutledge to the park because there are no sidewalks or curbs, said White.

Saanich parks department staff are in favor of the closure. White said if Rutledge remained open he would would move his family — three small children under six — away from the district.

Henry Piedt spoke for a delegation of elderly longtime residents.

"There's a mention of danger but where can you go in the metropolitan area that's free of danger?" he asked.

The present park is not used very much, Piedt claimed.

Ald. Sandy Noel, who with Geoff Vantreight and Mary Casilio opposed closure, said Saanich has made cul de sacs of other streets and it usually puts more pressure on surrounding streets.

Oboe sounds highlight unusual evening

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A charmingly evocative Vaughan Williams' Concerto for Oboe conjured visions of sun-drenched Greek hillsides and shepherds piping for Monday's International Festival concert audience.

Bert Lucarelli, one of the world's foremost oboists, who is not only a master of the temperamental instrument, but a superbly sensitive artist, performed the Concerto with Gervase de Peyer conducting the Victoria Symphony Summer Festival Orchestra.

The reedy, haunting tone-color of the oboe is perfectly exploited in this music and there are numerous delicately florid passages that equallly exploit the performer's virtuosity.

The Lucarelli sound is pure and expressive in lyrical moments, glistens like sunlight dancing on water in the gossipy presto finale. A lilting dialogue between solo instrument and the orchestra strings takes place in this movement, and for the orchestra this was one of the best parts of the evening.

Liszt's Malediction for Piano and Strings is from the composer's earliest period. It was unfamiliar to most of us and unlikely to become a favorite despite the excellent reading given it by Joseph Bloch. It appeared fiendishly difficult for the orchestra at least under the Festival's necessarily limited rehearsal schedule.

De Peyer did his best but the ensemble was frequently ragged. Bloch's performance was nevertheless, one of complete authority and commanding virtuosity.

This was an evening for the somewhat unusual. It concluded with a Shostakovich work that to the best of my belief has not been previously performed here — the Concerto for Piano and Trumpet, Op. 35.

Robin McCabe was the pianist and she was joined by trumpeter Stephen Woodyard.

The work was perfectly suited to McCabe's fluent style and lively imagination. It is mischievous, tongue-in-cheek, with contrasting episodes of brooding melancholy. The trumpet interpolations provide lyrical and dramatic accents which were effectively realized by Woodyard.

De Peyer and the orchestra entered thoroughly into the mood and so did the audience. From the ovation given the performance it seemed that they would have been happy to hear the whole thing again.

Some lovely and seldom heard Schubert vocal works formed the bulk of Sunday's program. Duets, trios and quartets sung by a group of greatly gifted young artists from the Opera Centre of the Johannesen International School, made the evening memorable.

They were accompanied with notable artistry at the piano by Harold Brown. Preparation of the "Schubertfest" was by Leopold Simoneau.

The profound musicianship and technical mastery of violinist Yuri Mazurkevich with the incomparable Mitchell Andrews at the piano, provided a glowing instrumental close to the program with Brahms' Sonata in G Major Op. 78 and Tartini's "Devil's Trill" Sonata in G minor.

Tonight's "Keyboard Opulence" concert is the last in the festival, with only Opera Piccola performances to come next weekend. The program will feature Mitchell Andrews, Bela Siki, Joseph Bloch, and Robin McCabe. Robin with her sister, Rachelle, will also perform the piano, four hands Sonata in B flat Major by Mozart.

Top jazz drummer in free concert

One of the big names in today's jazz, drummer and keyboard artist Jack DeJohnette, with his new group, Special Edition, will conclude the Victoria Jazz Society's presentations in Beacon Hill Park for this summer.

This major jazz event starts Wednesday at 7 p.m.

DeJohnette's Special Edition will feature Peter Warren on cello and double bass, with saxophonists David Murray and Chico Freeman.

The drummer has been described as a master of the world of intimate percussive sounds, and by Down Beat magazine as "possibly the most vital drummer in jazz today."

He has worked with John Coltrane, Sonny Rollins, Miles Davis, Stan Getz and many others. He made his first LP for ECM in 1972 with pianist Keith Jarrett.

De Johnette's recordings as a leader include Untitled, New Rags and New Directions, the last, with guitarist John Abercrombie, bassist Eddie Gomez and Tumpeter Lester Bowie, won the 'Grand Prix du Disque' in 1978.

DeJOHNETTE
. . . concluding concert

His latest recording for ECM is Special Edition with Murray and Warren and saxophonist Arthur Blythe.

DeJohnette's two-hour concert in the park is free to the public.

SC unveils new finance control bill

Proposed changes to B.C.'s financial legislation would eliminate the deadline for tabling of the government's annual report on earnings and spendings.

Public accounts now must be tabled with the house 15 days after the opening of the legislature for the following year.

The Financial Administration Act — released Friday by Finance Minister Hugh Curtis for discussion purposes — would simply require its delivery to the house as soon as possible.

NDP finance critic Dave Stupich has not yet seen the discussion paper, but said: "It would appear to leave it wide open."

The proposed legislation also would place strict controls and information requirements on public bodies, including the disclosure of executive salaries. Besides Crown corporations such as the Insurance Corp. of B.C. and B.C. Hydro, it would also include a number of agencies legally independent of government, but which rely on public funding.

The discussion paper says that the most difficult task will be to identify all public bodies to be covered by the legislation — an admittedly incomplete list of 170 is contained in the paper — and to what degree of control they should be subjected.

Some bodies, such as ones which receive 30 per cent or less of their revenue from the public purse, would probably be placed in a special class subject to minimal controls such as accounting to the government for the use of public funds.

Others may be required to have their accounting systems subject to finance ministry approval, to table an audit report and an annual report and proposed budgets to the legislature, obtain approval for all contracts and collective bargaining framework and control over borrowing and lending.

The proposed legislation — which combined the obsolete Revenue Act and Financial Control Act — was strongly recommended by Auditor-General Erma Morrison in her last two reports to the legislature.

Submissions on the legislation will be reviewed by a committee headed by Deputy Finance Minister Larry Bell. The proposed act then will be redrafted and presented to the legislature early in the 1981 session.

Hansard editor drops request

Hansard editor Peter Robbins says he won't pursue his case against Al Passarell despite the NDP MLA's refusal to apologize in the legislature for claiming his privileges had been breached.

Robbins said last week that he felt his name had not been fully cleared by Speaker Walter Davidson's ruling that he committed no wrong by contacting the Church of Scientology to check facts following a statement made by Passarell in the house.

Passarell spoke about the controversial religious organization in connection with a Crown land lease and a day later rose to complain that within minutes of his speech the entire text was read to church officials in Vancouver by Robbins.

He suggested his privileges had been breached because MLAs are supposed to receive copies of Hansard before anyone else. However, Davidson determined that Robbins had only called the church to confirm spellings and technical details contained in Passarell's speech and ruled his privileges were not breached.

Robbins said that despite that ruling, there was a cloud of suspicion over his head and all others who work for Hansard, the official written record of the legislative debates, and asked for an apology and a correction.

Passarell refused, saying: "I go by the Speaker's decision."

Asked what his next move was, Robbins said: "Probably nothing in so far as the press has carried a correction of his initial incorrect allegation."

SC anathema now its own bill

Social Credit members of the legislature defended Monday land-acquisition legislation which they had opposed bitterly when they were in opposition seven years ago.

NDP MLAs attacked the government for a hypocritical attitude during second-reading debate on the Ministry of Agriculture and Food Act, which would give the ministry the power to acquire, administer, dispose of, operate on and make improvements to land.

NDP agriculture critic Barbara Wallace said the wording is the same used in the controversial Land Commission Act introduced by the former NDP government in 1973.

"Many members on that side of the house — and we've quoted a few of them — spoke for hours and hours pointing out that acquire meant expropriate," she said.

"They raised such a fuss in fact that Dave Stupich (former agriculture minister) amended the bill to say that it meant that he could acquire land other than by expropriation."

The bill also allows the ministry to acquire equipment, lease stores, processing plants and wholesale warehouses, she said.

"I'm not saying it's bad legislation, but it's surprising legislation coming from that government," she said. "It literally gives the power to the minister to establish a state farm or any factor of the processing industry."

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said the new act would give his ministry a chance to become better involved in the food industry.

First test police merger water, Mayor Evers told

The first step toward establishing a metropolitan Vancouver police force is communication among the various police boards in the area, Attorney-General Allan Williams said Monday.

Williams said that New Westminster Mayor Muni Evers, who is calling for the combined force, should contact other area mayors and police board chairmen to see how they feel about the move. The next step would be to contact the B.C. Police Commission and ask it to examine the effectiveness of a combined force, Williams said.

Evers wants a metropolitan force to alleviate his city's manpower shortage and increasing police costs.

Jacques Cousteau, the French oceanographer, said Sunday he has finished the first stage of a comprehensive research and film project at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. One of the more interesting discoveries to date, he said, was that of a French whale boat that sank off the south coast of Labrador in 1554. The film is scheduled for release in the fall of 1981.

Convicted murderer Charles Manson has begun a "controlled re-entry program" into the prison population as a chapel porter at California Medical Facility in Vacaville, Calif., authorities say. Manson is escorted to and from the chapel area each day, prison spokesman Gary Straughn said.

Manson

Manson, 46, began serving multiple life sentences at the facility after his 1971 conviction for the Tate-LaBianca slayings.

Every family has its little squabbles, and Willie Nelson's is no exception. But the bus? Seems a few of his band members got into an argument with the bus driver in Indianapolis last week. They settled the matter by swiping it. The cops had no trouble rounding up the renegades. The bus — emblazoned with the words, "Willie Nelson and Family" — was spotted by several motorists and a radio station helicopter. Nobody was arrested. It was, after all, a family matter.

Ubiquitous Canadian actor Donald Sutherland has signed to star in Passage, a Canadian film to go into production in September. Sutherland will play a man torn by the moral and emotional questions of heart and other organ transplants.

Bob Ertel, accompanied by his singing dog, won the annual hog-calling contest at the Indiana State Fair. But his wife, Pat, had to settle for second place in the husband-calling competition. Ertel of Batesville, Ind., was using the standard "Soooeeeeeee!" call when the family dog ran up from the audience and joined in with a chorus of howls. The louder Ertel yelled, the louder the dog howled. The combination proved unbeatable. Ertel's wife finished second in the husband-calling contest. Mrs. knott, who entered at her husband's urging, hollered out her husband's first and middle names, David Harry, then added a long "Soooeeeeeee" and two short "Soooeeees" at the end.

Dear Abby:

My girlfriend and I were all set to get married when I pulled overseas duty. (I'm a private in the U.S. Army.) We decided that since I would be gone for a year, we should postpone the marriage until I got back home.

Well, three weeks after I got here (please don't say where), I got a letter from my girlfriend back home (don't mention the town), telling me that she is in a family way!

She can't afford to come where I am to marry me, and I am not able to get back home, so we are in a fix!

I have heard that there is a way to get married by "proxy." I think it's by telephone with a clergyman on both ends. Anyway, I would sure appreciate it if you could tell me if it's possible, because I love this girl and she loves me, and we want our baby to be legitimate.

Worried Soldier

Dear Worried:

Only 12 states recognize proxy marriages. Find your chaplain on the double, soldier, and tell him what's on your mind. Your chances are 12 in 50. Here's hoping you're luckier now than you were then.

Dear Abby:

The following is a special message recently published in the Wall Street Journal. Feel free to use it.

"The most creative job in the world involves: taste, fashion, decorating, recreation, education, transportation, psychology, romance, cuisine, designing, literature, medicine, handicraft, art, horticulture, economics, government, community relations, pediatrics, geriatrics, entertainment, maintenance, purchasing, direct mail, law, accounting, religion, energy and management.

"Anyone who can handle all those has to be somebody special.

"She is. She's a homemaker."

Raymond D'Argenio, United Technologies Corp.

Dear Mr. D'Argenio:

Beautiful. But homemakers are no longer exclusively female. Would you consider amending the last two sentences by changing the "she" to "person"?

Dear Abby:

One of my fellow workers is planning an outdoor wedding and reception. Everything she has ordered for the occasion will be colorful and symbolic of this occasion, but she plans to carry a bridal bouquet of black roses.

Is this proper? After all, don't they symbolize death?

From The P.B. Bunch

Dear Bunch:

Black roses? You're putting me on.

Kilts are back in style again

By SANDRA SALMANS
New York Times

EDINBURGH — Robert McVie lit a celebratory cigar, adjusted his garters and flashes and, not for the first time, admired his new kilt. A Glasgow-born warehouse supervisor, the 40-year-old McVie had just paid $700 in cash for his outfit: the kilt, a blue tweed jacket, a pony-skin sporran and all the other clothes that make the complete Scotsman.

"I promised myself a kilt when I was a boy," he said. "It's taken me a while to get it, but I'm proud of my kilt."

McVie has plenty of company. Suddenly kilts are back in style. They turned up in the Chanel collection at the Paris couture showings last month, and department stores in New York are featuring them as fall items for women. They have always been considered classics for conservative dressers, but now their popularity seems to be spreading.

Here in Edinburgh, Scottish nationalism and an increase in disposable income are perceived to be responsible. "There has been a resurgence of interest in the kilt," said Douglas Kinloch Anderson of Kinloch Anderson, the premier kilt maker. Anderson, whose older brother, Eric, was recently named headmaster of Eton College, represents the fifth generation to run the family business.

The 112-year-old company makes the kilts of Princes Charles and Philip, as well as the Queen's kilted skirts. (At Kinloch Anderson, women are said to wear kilted skirts, not kilts. "A kilt is a man's garment, first and foremost," said Harry Lindley, a director and fitter. "Women wear dresses.") During the summer, there is steady traffic between the concern's George Street store and Balmoral Castle.

But commoners account for most of the orders, which this year will run into several hundred kilts — including about 100 for the United States — at a minimum price of $250 each. Other kilts will be returned to Kinloch Anderson, to be altered for sons or grandsons. "One of the troubles with kilts is that they last too long," said Anderson in a soft Scottish burr. At 41, he has been wearing the same kilt for more than 20 years, and has passed his earlier kilts on to his sons.

The prices do discourage imposters, however. "In 99 cases out of 100, our customers are entitled to the tartan, even if the connection is 10 generations back," said Lindley. Of the more than 500 tartans in existence, Kinloch Anderson stocks nearly 400, from Abercrombie and Black Watch to Urquhart and Wallace.

Most of the kilts are handsewn in two small rooms above the shop, with a care and precision worthy of Savile Row. "We don't just make a kilt," said Lindley. "We build it."

The fundamental rule of a well-made kilt is that the pleated area should appear, like the front apron, to be a flat, unbroken length of tartan. Thus, if the tartan has a short "set" — the distance from the start of the pattern to the point where it begins repeating — the pleats are shallow; a long set requires deeper pleats.

A normal, five-inch set causes few problems, but the difficulty arises with tartans such as the Ogilvy, which has an extraordinary 36-inch set. The kilt maker has to vary the depth of pleats to achieve the required look. "The technique is in the planning and chalking of the kilt," said Lindley.

The method requires not only dexterity, but an enormous amount of cloth. While most women's kilted skirts use no more than two yards, a man's kilt may contain between seven and 10 yards of cloth. On the underside, much of it is snipped away at the waist and hips, to reduce bulk, and a lining is stitched over the area. With its thickness and weight, the kilt suggests armor as much as clothing.

The kilt "is so heavy and solid that there's no worry about its blowing in the wind," noted Lindley. The kilt pin is purely decorative, a relic of the days before buckles when Scotsmen pinned their kilts at the waist. What, if anything, Scotsmen wear under their kilts "is a matter of personal choice," said Lindley.

Tartan briefs are probably the only kilt accessory that Kinloch Anderson does not carry. It stocks a vast range of sporrans, the purse that is suspended on straps from the waist, in which a Scotsman once carried his money and meal. Sporrans are available in leather and virtually every kind of animal skin except badger, a protected species in Britain.

Some sporran-makers, bowing to critics from the Greenpeace Foundation, a conservationist group, or to economics, have substituted synthetic fur for sealskin. But "not us," declared Lindley, who glowers at the Greenpeace criticism and notes irately that Scotsmen visiting the United States have sometimes had their sporrans confiscated by customs officials.

In addition to the sporran, the outfit includes a tweed jacket and matching tie, stockings (held up by garters and ornamental flashes, or ribbons), shoes and skean dhu, the small knife that Scotsmen began tucking into their hose when the English banned Highlanders from carrying swords in the 1700s. "The man is the peacock in Scotland," said Lindley. "He can spend more than $2,000 here without any difficulty."

Women account for most of Kinloch Anderson's sales. A few years ago, Anderson abandoned the company's men's-tailoring operation to concentrate on its fast-growing business in kilted and pleated skirts, plus coordinated knitwear. The skirts are made up in every tartan except the Balmoral, which was designed for Queen Victoria and can be worn only by the royal family.

Head-to-toe Scottish regalia can cost as much as $2,000

Antique jewelry: Perfection in miniature

WINNIPEG (CP) — Antique jewelry has become so sought after that the "trick is to buy the stuff, not to sell," says expert Ivan Rogers.

Rogers, an antique and estate jewelry buyer for Mappins Jewellers of London, says the stuff is well worth buying even though "it can be a bit pricey."

That's because antique jewelry not only outlasts history but contains fine and detailed workmanship.

"Look at that pin," Rogers said while here recently for a show and sale of jewelry sponsored by Mappins.

The pin has an 1870 ruby and diamond brooch, selling for $9,000.

"It's just as well-made from the back as from the front." He displayed an 1850 pendant of a cabochon garnet surrounded by about 400 tiny rose-cut diamonds.

Rogers estimated it took the jeweller at least 400 hours to complete the piece which sells for $4,950.

"You couldn't make it for $8,000 today."

Rogers said most old jewelry is well made and worth the cost.

"The value in some cases is the materials themselves and the stones." In other cases, it may be because of the item's historical value.

"This one was a gift from the Princess of Wales to Mary Bagley on her wedding day," said Rogers, holding up a pearl-encrusted gold brooch and ear-ring set.

"She was probably a handmaiden."

On the back of the pin is a picture of Princess Alexandra and an engraved inscription: "Presented by HRH the Princess of Wales to Mary Bagley on her marriage the 24th of March 1868."

The brooch sells for $4,025.

Rogers said there is little antique jewelry from Europe.

"Most of the countries of northern Europe paid for wars with jewelry," he said.

"In Germany, all through the wars of the 1800s, the government would ask the people to give up their jewels for the cause. These would be replaced with iron jewelry. It was a mark of patriotism to have iron jewelry."

The oldest piece in the Winnipeg show was an iron seal, about 225 years old, which sells for $385.

Most of the jewelry on display was from the Victorian era and reflected the condition of the people at that time.

"We knew that they all had muscular diseases of some kind. The rings were all very large, because the people had swollen knuckles."

As well, the people seemed to have a hygiene problem.

"This ring was worn over a glove which is why it is so large," Rogers said, holding up a ruby ring priced at $1,250. "Their hands were not too clean so they needed gloves."

Many causes for abdominal cramping

By L. L. COLEMAN, M.D.

Every once in a while I have an attack of abdominal cramps. This lasts for a few days, then goes away. How would one go about getting to the bottom of this?

T.H.

Dear T.H.:

This is not an easy problem to solve. I would do you an injustice if I even vaguely attempted to suggest a diagnosis. Yet I can speculate about the possibilities and, perhaps, direct you to ways of tracking down the cause.

To illustrate how difficult it is to find the cause of abdominal cramps and diarrhea, I will tell you about a case that was reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

A doctor who was attending a medical meeting had consumed 12 diet mints in a two hour period. About 30 minutes after he ate the last mint he developed severe abdominal distress, with cramps, gas and diarrhea. By some fortuitous circumstance, it occurred to him to check on the ingredients in the mint. He found that sorbitol was used as the sweetener.

The Journal said, "Unlike the more potent artificial sweetener, saccharin, sorbitol must be taken in large amounts to achieve a desired taste effect. And, if sorbitol-sweetened foods are consumed in quantities they can cause considerable abdominal distress.

"Even in smaller amounts, lesser degrees of upset can occur, particularly in children. So, if abdominal symptoms occur in conjunction with eating diet foods or candy, check for sorbitol as the possible culprit."

As you can see, that is one possibility of recurring cramps. But there are many other possibilities. It takes real detective work and co-operation between you and your doctor to find the cause of your problem.

A careful survey of all the foods that you eat prior to an attack may furnish an important lead. Allergies to food, soft drinks and alcohol must be considered

Two years ago my son was hit in the face while playing basketball. He said he bled a lot, but no X-rays were taken. Now he has a crooked nose and I'm heartsick about it. Is it too late to have it repaired?

A.L.

Dear A.L.:

Your letter highlights my special feeling that any injury to the nose deserves an X-ray picture. For, if there is a slight chip fracture or even a major fracture, repositioning of the bone is a relatively simple procedure.

Even today, at this late date, it is possible to refracture the knitted bones and restore the nose to its former cosmetic condition.

Astrological Forecast for Wednesday, August 20, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You "absorb" knowledge. Publicity, timing dominate scenario. Accent on journey, publishing, communication, dealing with "established" persons. Cancer, Capricorn natives figure prominently. You get what you want, but in indirect manner. You'll see!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You go places, meet people, make snap decisions and could fall "madly in love." Gemini, Sagittarius natives figure prominently. Spotlight on financial status of one close to you, including partner or mate. You get involved in situation that smacks of the occult.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Go slow, accept some restrictions as necessary, perhaps beneficial. Aquarius, Scorpio natives play key roles. Accent on co-operative efforts, partnerships, contracts, marital status. Defer to judgment of individual with proven "track record."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obtain hint from Gemini message. Go slow, attend to basics, be aware of budget, pets and dependents. Keep medical or dental appointments. Changes occur, special messages are received — member of opposite sex says you are grand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Excitement of speculation is featured — you get to heart of matters, you learn where you stand with member of opposite sex. Another Leo figures prominently. You remodel, improve comfort at home; family member makes major concession.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Define meanings, see as is, avoid self-deception. Capricorn, Pisces and another Virgo figure prominently. Get professional opinion on land, home values. Do something constructive about security, obtaining quality material.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Relative who insists on living in past should not be permitted to sway you from ultimate goal. Stand firm for beliefs, principles. Short journey could be featured. Debt is repaid. You benefit from "special conference."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Past efforts bear fruit. Accent on payments, collections, finishing project which had been a financial drain. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently. Aggressive associate will "see things your way."

You locate item that had been misplaced.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): New avenues of expression, opportunity become available. Leo, Aquarius persons play important roles. You'll be more independent; chance to put ideas to use will highlight scenario. Timing is right — take initiative. Make fresh start in new direction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your "inner voice" speaks truth — you will know what to do and when to do it. Secret meeting works to your advantage. Know it, cast aside fears, doubts. Someone, "very important", is working in your behalf — behind the scenes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Flurry of calls, trips, social activities dominate scenario. Gemini, Sagittarius persons play key roles. Early dispute could be transformed into a "grand alliance." Humor, versatility, relief of pressure will be accented.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get new deal, fresh chance to improve ability. Expect more responsibility, greater reward or profit potential. Aquarius, Scorpio, Leo natives figure prominently. Your position is stronger than originally anticipated.

IF AUGUST 20TH IS YOUR BIRTHDAY . . . you are perceptive, protective of loved ones, shrewd about food and necessities. You are no person's fool, but you can be a victim of self-deception. You are emotional, loyal and can brood about minor matters. During real emergencies, however, you are cool and courageous. Cancer, Capricorn individuals play important roles in your life.

Dear Dr. Cotter:

I am a 16-year-old boy and very depressed. I have never had a true girlfriend. As soon as I meet a new girl she drifts away even before I get to know her. Either they say they like me as a friend and never talk to me, or they say things which I think are unprintable. This really has me down and looking toward suicide.

I don't want to talk to my doctor about it because he will not take it seriously. My school counselor can't help me because I'm not in school anymore. Everyone thinks I'm joking about killing myself until I really do it. And I'm just about there. Can you help me to get things straight?

Answer: I don't think you're joking, and I hope this reaches you before you hurt yourself. Take down your phone book, and look up a distress Centre, crisis centre, or suicide prevention centre: Write down the number, and call the people there when you feel desperate; they will take you seriously, and you will be able to speak freely to them.

I think your problem about the girlfriend is a symptom of the more difficult thing, which is that the pressures of life and of growing up are getting too much for you. I don't blame you, because the world is rough, and if you are the least bit sensitive, it is hard to take the superficial and callous way people behave when you need real friendship. But, take heart: There are people who really care about you enough to spend some time on you and your problems.

Dear Dr. Levine:

I am a 12-year-old boy in Grade 8. Since I was born in late November, I am quite small by comparison to other people in Grade 8.

I am an average student, with good relations with my parents and teachers. Maybe one of the causes of my problems is that most of the other people of my age seem to be less mature than me. I always see the serious side of things.

I'm not really an athletic person. I haven't been on any teams in my life, mostly because I'm too afraid everyone will laugh at me. For some reason I have absolutely no afterschool friends.

Everyone seems to regard me as an outcast, a person not to be seen with. I have tried joining various clubs around school, but to no avail. I feel that people would like me if they just gave me a chance. Things have been like this for almost as long as I can remember. What can I do?

Answer: I don't want to over-simplify your problem, but a lot of it may be due to the fact that you are considerably younger and smaller than the other boys in your grade. At your chronological age, gaps are more significant than when one is much older.

You also give other reasons for the chasm between you and the other boys — you tend to be brighter, more serious, more mature and non-athletic. We already have a list of differences which could account for your sense of loneliness or social isolation.

What can you do about it? Well, obviously you either will change your whole personality to conform to the other kids or you will seek out young people who share your interests and activities, and who will appreciate you for who you are.

Wouldn't it be better to join a club which has a theme or purpose which fits in with your interests? I don't happen to know what they are, but, for example, chess, stamp collecting, photography, cooking, music — and on and on. By virtue of pursuing your interests, you "get out of your head," and meet kids automatically who share your ideas.

There is another important aspect to your letter. You say that this has been going on for as long as you can remember. And you give evidence of a lack of confidence in some activities. By developing your own talents and interests and not trying to copy others — you'll find your confidence returning.

You might get some benefit from speaking about your feelings to close adults interested in you.

Dear Mr. Vichert:

I am a 17-year-old girl and, although people say marijuana is not addicting, I am hooked on it and don't want to be.

About 2½ years ago, my friends and I started smoking pot just for kicks. We would get high at parties, concerts, etc. From there I started smoking more frequently and trying other drugs.

The problem now is that I haven't gone a single day for almost a year without getting high. My grades have really dropped and my friends are strictly stoners now. There is no help as far as my parents are concerned because I don't live at home anymore.

Grass has really changed me and I'm starting to get scared.

Answer: I would suggest that you contact the Alcohol and Drug Research Foundation and ask its help and advice. The staff experts have a lot of knowledge and experience in helping people who are addicted to drugs or alcohol.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

The orange revelation

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — If you are a "sucker, squeezer or chewer," then you'd better be careful eating oranges in front of Barbara Burman. You may be revealing facets of your personality you want kept secret.

Miss Burman, who is on a promotional tour for Outspan — South African Citrus fruits — said that a British psychoanalyst conducted a survey to determine whether the way people eat oranges holds a key to their personalities.

Miss Burman said the results of the test have been amazingly accurate.

If you never use a knife to peel your orange chances are you're a chewer.

This means, she said, that you are more mature and well balanced than average.

If you are what she calls a "safe chewer" (one who doesn't slurp) then it could be you had a repressive childhood. The chewer usually prefers a small circle of friends to large gatherings and makes a good confidant.

In work, his one failing is that he tends to overlook small details and can often come to grief because of this. In general a chewer has a good supply of common sense and is adept at turning ideas into reality.

Romantically, the chewer expects a high standard from his friends and lovers, expecting them to conform to the norm of his social circle.

Chewers get bored easily with the routine of life and require constant excitement and stimulation to keep them happy.

The sucker is one who cuts his orange into either halves or quarters and sucks all the juices out. He is someone who is very sensitive and craves security.

Socially, suckers are very much in demand. They can be amusing and make good actors and actresses which gives them relief from identity problems.

Suckers steer away from intimate physical contact, preferring a cuddle to anything else, said Miss Burman. They are also very jealous and imaginative.

A biter is someone who cuts his orange into either halves or quarters and proceeds to bite the inside. Biters are very vigorous people — they tend to be very competitive and impatient.

Miss Burman said that sometimes they seem to be insensitive, but they are true friends to those who capture their friendship.

They have a strong rebellious streak and they strive for material success. Biters make good leaders. In later life if biters don't find the right partner, they tend to become bitter.

A squeezer is someone who cuts an orange and then squeezes and mangles it to get the juice and eats what is left.

Such people are shy and awkward, Miss Burman said. As a child they were sometimes made to feel inadequate. Squeezers hate the limelight and are very sensitive.

She said that squeezers usually work hard, hate to feel neglected and when they are, they sulk. They also try to manipulate others into a situation where they will fail.

Despite this, squeezers have a strong capacity for love.

The law frowns on trench coats

By WILLIAM BORDERS
New York Times

LONDON — The British trench coat, much beloved over the years by spies, foreign correspondents, private detectives and other would-be tough guys, has fallen under the unfriendly scrutiny of the United States Customs Service.

Burberrys Ltd., the original maker of this military-style raincoat, is fighting back vigorously in a legal battle that could affect millions of dollars worth of American imports of raincoats, safari suits and Western-style cowboy shirts from Britain and other countries.

The trench coat dispute centers on the epaulets — the shoulder flaps that help give the garment its military flair. If the epaulets and other doodads attached to the coat are mere ornamentation, the Customs Service says, then the coat might be reclassified as an "ornamented garment," making it subject to a considerably higher duty than is now paid on it.

Burberrys and the other manufacturers that would be affected concede that few trench coat owners nowadays tuck binocular straps under the epaulets or hang hand grenades from the brass rings on the belt as the original owners did in World War I, when the coat became popular. But they maintain that these features are the essence of the garment's traditional appeal, not just ornamentation.

"A trench coat wouldn't be a trench coat without its epaulets, so it seems very unfair to charge a great deal more duty just because of them," said Stanley Peacock, the managing director of Burberrys. "When we first heard of the proposed change in the American rules, we even talked about removing the epaulets. But then, we thought, what about our pocket flaps or the throat tabs, which are all elements of the style, really. We're quite distressed about the whole thing."

The American duty on ornamented cotton garments is 35 per cent, compared with 8 per cent on garments that are not ornamented. The Customs Service has not actually changed the classification, but in a formal notice published in Washington this other nonessential features such as simulated belts as well as the overlaid yokes that are characteristic of Western shirts. In a recent court decision, Highland jackets (which have silver braided epaulettes) were declared ornmented items.

According to industry sources in the United States, the changes that are being considered could affect not only the British trench coats made by Burberrys, Acquascutum and others but also so-called bush jackets and safari suits made in Yugoslavia and Italy and cowboy shirts made in Hong Kong, South Korea and Japan.

"It's ridiculous to apply here a customs principle that was designed years ago to protect the domestic lace and embroidery industry," said Ted Rowland of the American Importers Association. "A traditional garment is not ornamented by the things that make it traditional. And the only effect the change would have is to raise prices. The man who wants to buy a Burberry coat is still going to buy one. He'll just have to pay even more than he already does."

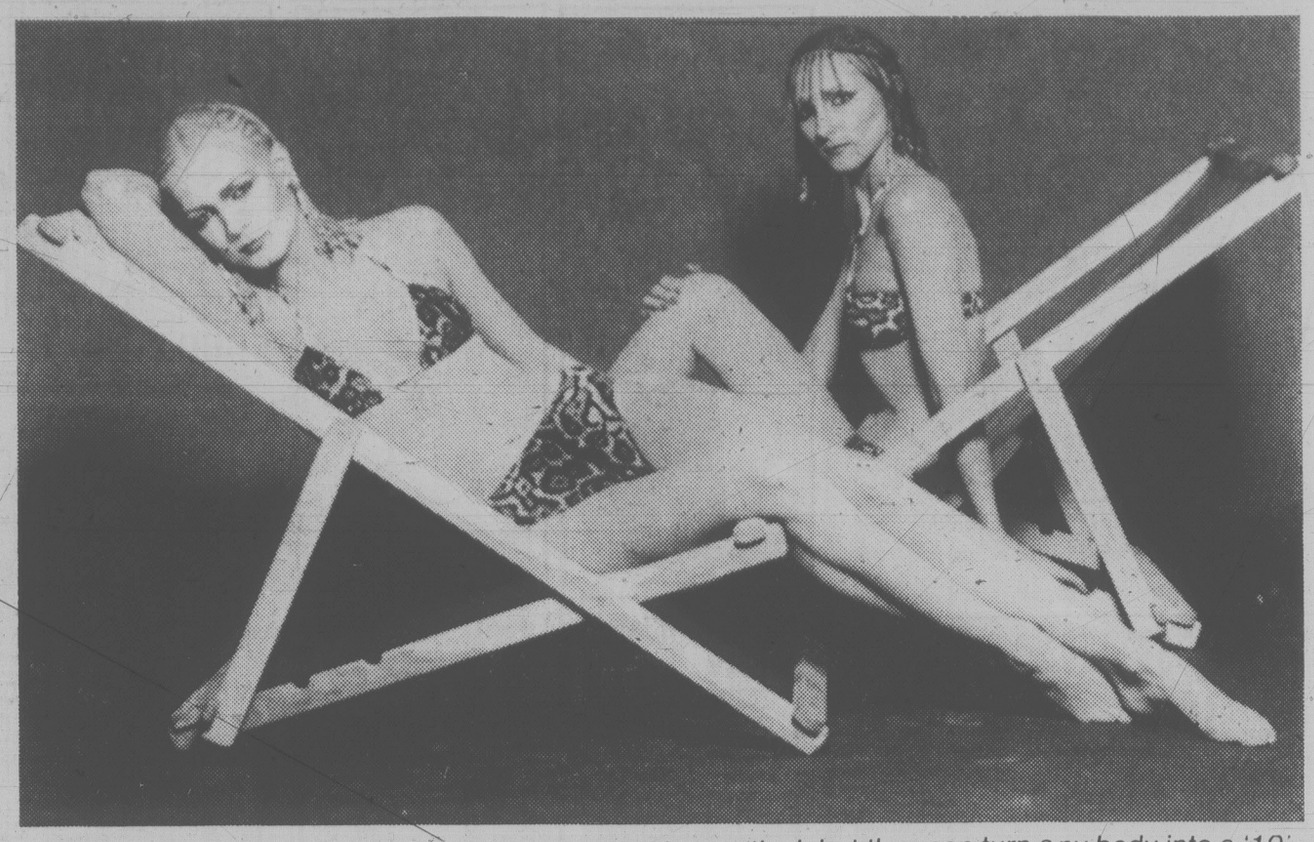
Trench coats made by Burberrys, which are sold in the company's new store here as well as at Bloomingdale's, Barney's and 250 other outlets in the United States, already retail for between $325 and $495, which is about the same as they cost in London.

Double-breasted and full, with a belt at the waist and belted on the cuffs, today's trench coats look scarcely different from the ones that Burberrys first made during World War I for British army officers to wear in the trenches on the Western Front.

When the men came back to London to resume civilian life, they brought their trench coats with them, and the style caught on. There is a women's version that looks the same except that the buttons are on the opposite side. The trench coat has been a fashion mainstay over the years, helped enormously by such patrons as Humphrey Bogart and Clark Gable.

Although there are many manufacturers of trench coats in Britain, the leader is still Burberrys. And the cloth is still basically the same waterproof weave that Thomas Burberry, a draper in a Hampshire village west of London, invented 100 years ago.

"Americans have always been partial to our trench coat," said a salesman, gazing fondly at a rack containing dozens of them in a Burberrys shop on Regent Street. "I hope they aren't going to get so expensive that your chaps won't buy them any more."



Giorgio Sant'Angelo's 1981 swimsuits may seem impractical, but they can turn any body into a '10'

When designers tackle a swimsuit they've got to add some trimming

By ANNE SCHIRO
New York Times

NEW YORK — Leave it to Giorgio Sant'Angelo to set the scene to perfection. When the architect-turned-fashion-and-home-furnishings designer presented his resort 1981 swimwear show for Sinclair last week, the air was warm, the sun was streaming through the windows of his 57th Street showroom in New York, and the room itself was decorated like a beach house.

Couches and deck chairs covered in offwhite canvas, a mattress heaped with printed pillows, colorful Oriental umbrellas and giant paper fans were a fitting backdrop for clothes to wear at the beach.

The swimsuits and cover-ups themselves were in colors that look their best against beige sand, blue water and bronze skin: pink, aqua, turquoise, green, lilac, sapphire, periwinkle, ruby red and, best of all, white. Often, three complementary colors were combined, such as aqua, green and sapphire. Few suits were all one color; none were unembellished.

When fashion designers turn their talents to swimsuits, they can't resist adding some kind of trimming. Sant'Angelo used appliqued leaves, ruffles, fan-pleated curlicues, scatterings of pearls that shimmered like beads of sea water, fringes around the neck, down the sides or at the leg and, most spectacular of all, borders of sequined flowers and leaves. Esther Williams might have worn one of those.

His ideas for cover-ups included a long, lean dress in gray sweatshirt fabric piped in pink, a ruffled terry cloth skirt and lace-bordered terry robes. Some of his ruffled or fringed skirts to tie around the waist were about as long as a bikini bottom: practical, no; fetching, decidedly.

Oscar de la Renta also unwrapped a swimwear show this week. It was his first collection for Wavelengths, and his use of ruffles, bows, flowers and carnival colors stamped it unmistakably in his style.

He used jewel tones of coral, turquoise, amethyst and emerald green, often striped with black and white. In fact, stripes were a theme that ran through the collection — vertically, horizontally and diagonally. But ruffles were his favorite idea, bouncing around the bosom and hips of both bikinis and maillots. One striped cover-up had a giant ruffled collar. There were also ruffled cotton sarongs to tie around the hips, and a rhumba skirt with tiers of black-and-white striped ruffles.

A neat strapless suit came in white, with a bow-tied black band around the top, or in black, with a white band. The last suit in the show pulled out all the stops: It was strapless, striped and ruffled and had an enormous black bow in the rear.

After several years in which maillots were being cut so high and so low they looked as skimpy as string bikinis, it was a relief to see that both Giorgio Sant'Angelo and Oscar de la Renta were cutting their maillots more modestly. True, there were a couple of cutouts, but nothing daring. Both designers obviously hope to appeal to the less exhibitionist segment of the population.

GENEVA (AP) — The UN's International Labor Organization says women now make up more than one-third of the world's labor force, mainly working in industry and the service sector. The study showed that China alone accounted for one-quarter of the world's working women.

It may seem that South should go down one against proper defense, but actually three notrump can be made if declarer plays his cards correctly. South wins the heart lead with the queen and is now faced with a crucial decision. He is in position to see that if he immediately attacks clubs to force out the ace, he will almost surely wind up going down one.

Another heart would come back from West, thus establishing that suit. South could then cash eight tricks — two hearts, three diamonds and three clubs. When he now played a spade, West would win with the ace and run his hearts to put an end to the matter.

All this is easily predictable if declarer stops to plan his play after winning the opening heart lead with the queen. Therefore, instead of putting his head on the chopping block at trick two, South plays a low spade from his hand toward dummy's king!

Declarer does this for two reasons. First, there is a good chance that West, holding the spade ace, will make a mistake and not go up with it. If this occurs, South is home. Having "stolen" a spade trick, he then attacks clubs and thus scores nine tricks.

Second, it may be that West was dealt three spades to the ace, in which case he is helpless whatever he does. Thus, if West rises with the ace, South makes his nine tricks by scoring four spades, two hearts and three diamonds.

So the principle that emerges is that a declarer should not always attack his strongest suit — clubs, in this case — if there is a good tactical reason for leading some other suit. Bridge is by no means a game of hard and fast rules. You should play according to the common sense of a situation, not by a rigid formula.

CMHC funds new care beds

A new agreement and extra funding from the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will allow B.C. to increase its 1980 long-term care bed target by 365 beds, Health Minister Rafe Mair said Monday.

The extra beds will bring this year's quota to 1,113.

Three projects in the Greater Victoria area will be able to go ahead immediately as a result of the agreement in which B.C. becomes the mortgage guarantor for non-profit societies building long-term care facilities.

They are the 84-bed Baptist Housing Society's Edward House project in Victoria, the 75-bed Seventh Day Adventist project in Sidney and the 30-bed Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association project in Victoria.

Other new beds to be provided on Vancouver Island this year include 70 for the Multi-Level Care Society in James Bay, 120 for Glendale Lodge in Oak Bay, 50 in Parksville, 75 in Courtenay and 25 in Cumberland.

Alberta-federal oil hassle cooling Esso to Cold Lake

EDMONTON (CP) — Imperial Oil Ltd. may have to reconsider its $8-billion oil sands project proposed for Cold Lake, Alta., if federal-provincial oil-pricing confrontation forces prolonged delay, Imperial chairman Jack Armstrong said Monday.

"We certainly hope the project will go ahead but we cannot afford indefinite delay," he told a news conference.

Armstrong and Arden Haynes, president of Esso Resources Canada Ltd., said each year of delay would add about $1 billion to the cost of construction. Esso, a subsidiary of Imperial, is responsible for the project to produce 140,000 barrels of oil a day from the Cold Lake heavy-oil deposit.

Haynes said the often-quoted cost estimate of $7 billion for the project is already outdated "and our latest estimate is at least $8 billion" — provided approval of the project can be received in time for construction to begin early next year with production to start in 1986.

Armstrong said Imperial and its partners had considered abandoning the Syncrude oil sands project when its viability was in doubt several years ago. The project was rescued by the federal, Alberta and Ontario governments which became partners.

Armstrong and Haynes said Esso would have invested more than $100 million, or $50 million in after-tax cost, in the Cold Lake area by the end of this year and it would make more sense to shelve the project before Imperial's losses become excessive.

But Armstrong was confident that "the federal and Alberta governments will come to an agreement" to allow the project to proceed.

Armstrong and the Imperial board of directors are travelling across Canada this year to mark Imperial's centennial. Imperial, a subsidiary of Exxon Corp. of New York and Canada's largest oil company, was incorporated on Sept. 8, 1880.

Imperial's profits for 1979 amounted to $493 million, up 50 per cent from 1978 and the largest in the company's history. Armstrong said he expects Imperial to do even better this year.

But Imperial is also making record investments in Canada, he said. Imperial's capital and exploration expenditures last year increased by 64 per cent to $879 million.

Auto import views differ

OTTAWA (CP) — Public opinion is divided on the issue of import restrictions on Japanese vehicles, but spokesmen for interest groups agree possible U.S. import curbs could lead to action here.

In the first four months of the year, Japan's share of the Canadian auto market more than doubled to 12.1 per cent from 5.9 per cent in 1979.

But import penetration is much greater in the U.S. where Japanese vehicles account for 21.3 per cent of the market in the first four months of the year compared with 15.4 per cent in the same period of 1979.

Industry Minister Herb Gray, citing "signs of burgeoning public opinion", said Monday that import curbs may be necessary if Japan doesn't increase parts purchases and invest in plants in Canada.

Gray says he has received letters of concern about the level of Japanese car imports, conceding the comments generally come from organizations such as the United Auto Workers union.

But, he maintains, "the basic prerequisite for being a successful consumer is in having an income from a stable job."

However, the Consumers Association of Canada is generally opposed to protectionist measures, says Helen Anderson, co-chairman of the association's economic policy committee.

"I see no public pressure among consumers for restrictions," she said in an interview from Toronto.

Buyer found for Maplewood

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government has found a western Canadian party to purchase the financially-troubled Maplewood Poultry, the president of the Abbotsford company said Monday night.

Brian Hambley, Maplewood president, said negotiations are under way with the company, whose name was not disclosed, which could produce a signed agreement by Friday under the same terms as those offered to Lilydale Co-operatives Ltd. of Edmonton.

Lilydale pulled out of a deal Monday in which it would have purchased to buy Maplewood for $7.5 million.

Hambley said the terms with the new buyer include receiving over $5 million in guaranteed loans from the federal and provincial governments.

Hydro crews busy after storm

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 90-minute thunderstorm in the area Sunday caused more power outages than any other storm in the last eight years, a British Columbia Hydro spokesman said Monday.

Most of the 41 outages in the Vancouver area came as the result of high winds knocking over trees, which downed heavy power cables, said Hugh Dickson, hydro spokesman.

Woman found in car trunk

ALDERGROVE (UPC) — A 57-year-old North Vancouver woman with a gunshot wound in her head has died after she was found by police in the locked trunk of an abandoned car.

A Langley RCMP spokesman said an unidentified man was expected to appear in provincial court today to face charges in the shooting Monday of Mary Louise Reeves.

The spokesman said police, acting on a tip, found Reeves in the car, which had been abandoned on a bush trail near Aldergrove.

The woman, suffering from one bullet wound in the head, was rushed to Royal Columbian Hospital in New Westminster but later died.

The spokesman said the shooting was believed to be linked to a child custody dispute.

Retired logger finally surrenders

VANCOUVER (UPC) — A retired 62-year-old logger surrendered to police Monday afternoon, ending a 2½-hour incident in which a woman was briefly held hostage.

The unidentified man surrendered to police about 4:30 p.m. after locking himself in a room of an East Vancouver house and threatening to cut his own throat.

Police were called shortly after 2:30 p.m. when a man was reported to be holding a woman at gunpoint. The man later released the woman and police seized a rifle, but the man retreated into the house.

Sgt. Ken Doern, a veteran hostage negotiatior, was called in to talk to the man, who police said held a knife to his own throat.

Squid catchers get 88.7 tons

VANCOUVER (CP) — The first of two Japanese fishing vessels to explore for squid off the B.C. coast at the invitation of the Canadian government was successful, Bob Wowchuck, head of off-shore fishing for the federal fisheries department said Monday.

During a 15-day trial run, the Tenyu Maru-37 caught 88.7 tons of medium-sized squid. "We're told by the Japanese that a daily catch of five tons could create an industry for squid," Wowchuck said.

But he added that "many factors, including more research, is necessary before we can come to any conclusion about a new industry.

"There is a Japanese market for squid, but whether squid is entering Canadian waters on a regular cycle or whether this was a fortunate catch is hard to say at this time," he said.

And with an average of one derailment a day, there is certain to be another accident more serious than last November's catastrophe in Mississauga, Ont., where about 250,000 residents were evacuated when deadly chlorine gas escaped into the air, Lukasiewicz said Monday.

Lukasiewicz, author of the book The Railway Game, said railways have refused to invest money to modernize and maintain equipment. And they never will unless the federal government subsidizes them.

The railways can't afford to make the changes on their own because they haul grain at cost and carry other such financial burdens for the government, Lukasiewicz, a Carleton University professor, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa.

Railways are also the only mode of transportation in Canada that owns its own expensive infrastructure such as the tracks and the signal equipment. Transport trucks, for example, travel on government-owned highways.

"The railways have been short-changed financially," he said.

The latest in Canada's litany of railway accidents occurred Sunday near Chatham, Ont., when a train carrying liquid butane derailed, forcing 36 persons to leave their homes.

The residents went back to their homes a few hours later after Ontario environment ministry spokesmen concluded there was no leak of butane and no danger. But they were evacuated again today as a precautionary measure while railway workmen put the cars back on the track.

A spokesman for the Chesapeake and Ohio railway of Cleveland, Ohio, owners of the train that was travelling to Sarnia, Ont., from St. Thomas, Ont., said a worn or broken track switch probably caused the derailment.

That's nothing unusual, said Lukasiewicz, who blames the 352 derailments reported to the Canadian transport commission last year on "poor maintenance or inadequate equipment."

"The railways are operating less safely than they did in 1960," he said.

"If you relate derailments to the amount of (railway) traffic, there are twice as many accidents as in 1960.

". . . . And to save money and increase profits, the railways are using heavier and heavier cars and trains. Now the weight is very high.

"After they started this program of increasing weights, they found the tracks were damaged more quickly than before."

Lukasiewicz said the record of rail safety in Canada is dismal when commpared with European countries, where the railways are owned by the governments.

Quoting from his book, published in 1976, he said there are three times as many derailments in Canada each year as in Japan and West Germany and twice as many as in France and Switzerland.

And there are five times as many collisions involving trains each year in Canada than in France and three times as many as in Switzerland.

Church sidetracks sex debate

HALIFAX (CP) — The United Church of Canada's potentially-explosive report on sexuality fizzled Monday after the church's 45 commissioners debated it for more than three hours, then referred it to a committee for further discussion.

The report, which says sexual intercourse may be right for unmarried persons in some instances, was praised by some as an excellent study document and condemned by others as the most "dangerous and misleading document" the United Church has ever seen.

The report establishes vague guidelines for permissible sexual intercourse for unmarried persons. It says the relationship between a man and a woman should be creative, supportive, socially responsible and joyous.

The report, which discusses topics such as homosexuality, marriage and fidelity, sexual orientation and the role of sex in the life of a Christian, was attacked by Rev. Morley Clarke, a family counsellor in London, Ont., who said the report will increase polarization in the church while contradicting biblical teaching.

But John Foster of Toronto, editor of the United Church social action newspaper, Issues, said he is in favor of the report's stance on homosexuality and would like to see the document approved as soon as possible.

He said homosexuals he has talked to in the church live in fear because of their sexual orientation.

The report, two years in the making, says there is no reason why homosexuals should not be ordained or commissioned.

The abortion report urges the federal government to remove from the Criminal Code of Canada all sections relating to abortion within the first 20 weeks of pregnancy. It says abortion is acceptable in certain moral, economic and social situations. It, too, was referred to a committee for further discussion.

Chocolate smuggling charge for Cadbury

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — Officials of a large candy company have pleaded not guilty to smuggling a chocolate ingredient into the United States from Canada.

Lawyers for Cadbury Schweppes U.S.A. Inc. appeared in U.S. District court Monday to deny nine counts handed down by a federal grand jury.

According to the indictments handed down earlier this month, the defendants smuggled 20 tons of a component called "chocolate crumb" across the border at Highgate Springs in 1977 by falsely labelling the shipment broken candy bars.

Import quotas requiring special licenses have been imposed on chocolate crumb to protect the U.S. dairy industry. The alleged offense was an attempt to avoid penalties of more than $200,000, officials said.

Boxer fighting Canadian tax

MONTREAL (CP) — Welterweight boxer Sugar Ray Leonard shouldn't have to pay a penny in Canadian taxes on the $3.5 million he earned for fighting Roberto Duran in a world title bout at the Olympic Stadium June 20, his lawyers argued Monday.

The lawyers made the claim in the Federal Court of Canada, while contesting a court order obtained by the federal revenue department. Canadian authorities are claiming more than $2 million in taxes from the former world champion's company, Sugar Ray Leonard Inc.

In documents filed in court, lawyers for Leonard argued that Canadian tax authorities "clearly exceeded" the powers granted them under federal law when they obtained a court order for seizure of funds.

The lawyers, who also represent the provincial Olympic Installations Board, said tax laws do not allow the national revenue department to obtain a seizure order against the provincial government or any of its agents.

The Olympic Installations Board, an agency of the Quebec government, lost about $900,000 organizing the Leonard-Duran fight. It is named as a third party in the seizure order, granted by the Federal Court hours before the fight.

In effect, the court ordered the installations board to withhold $2 million in payments to Leonard, pending settlement of the tax case.

Leonard's lawyers argued that the tax department's assessment, stating that the American fighter should pay $2,049,358 in taxes on $3.5 million in total fees, is "clearly abusive and grossly exaggerated."

In addition, they said the Quebec revenue department issued a written ruling prior to the fight exempting Leonard and his company from paying provincial taxes.

The exemption from Quebec taxes was obtained by the installations board as part of its contract with Sugar Ray Leonard Inc. A copy of the contract, filed in court, indicates that Leonard's company was also given assurances by the Olympic Installations Board that the fighter would be exempt from Canadian federal taxes.

The tax issue was a key point in the agreement to stage the fight in the Olympic Stadium. Leonard's corporation, based in Silver Springs, Md., wanted a guarantee that it would only pay profit tax to the United States internal revenue service, and not to the Quebec or Canadian governments.

The contract to stage the fight was signed on the basis of this "verbal reply." But a promised written ruling never materialized, and the answer finally came when federal revenue lawyers appeared in court June 20 and obtained the seizure order.

Bourgault just like Nessie: Levesque

MONTREAL (CP) — Pierre Bourgault, the pro-independence gadfly who is calling for Premier Rene Levesque to resign as Parti Quebecois leader, is someone who "comes back periodically like the Loch Ness monster," the premier said Monday.

"What Bourgault says doesn't affect anybody," Levesque said to reporters after comparing his foe to the mythical Scottish creature.

"He's not even a PQ member, and he hasn't been for years. He's speaking from outside the party."

The two men have rarely hidden their dislike for one another, with Levesque trying not to frighten voters who are undecided about Quebec independence and Bourgault accusing him of selling Quebec's freedom down the river.

But when Bourgault said in a weekend interview that Levesque should quit as party leader because he has stopped pushing for independence after losing the May 20 referendum on sovereignty-association, a brief truce between them quickly ended.

This cat burglar really steals cats

CALGARY (CP) — A cat burglar struck at the Calgary Zoo Sunday and made off with a three-month old bobcat.

Zoo officials said Monday the 2.26-kilogram male kitten was discovered missing around 3 p.m. when a zoo keeper went to feed him and found the padlock had been broken on its cage.

"I don't have a clue why anyone would steal a bobcat," said zoo supervisor Jim Price. "They sure don't make good pets."

Price said the small black-and-brown cat was small enough to tuck into a coat so security guards would likely miss anyone taking him through the zoo gates.

The kitten was worth about $100, and was the only one at the zoo.

Price believes there is no real chance of getting him back. He figures the thief may just let him loose when the bobcat gets too big.

Khuzestan warehouse explosion takes 90 lives

At least 90 people were killed and 35 wounded when a warehouse containing explosives blew up in Iran's oil-rich Khuzestan province, the official Pars news agency reported today.

Pars said the explosion occurred Monday night at a warehouse for a road construction company in Gachsaran, and that the blast was caused by a fire in an adjacent building that was caused by an electrical short-circuit.

President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr ordered soldiers and revolutionary organizations into the area to help rescue operations.

Khuzestan province, in the southwest, has been the scene of frequent anti-government sabotage attacks for more than a year by autonomy-seeking Iranian Arabs.

Meanwhile, the 52 U.S. hostages spent their 290th day in captivity today, their prospects for being visited or freed no better following another appeal from representatives of states allied with the U.S. government.

After the latest meeting Sunday with envoys from the Netherlands, Italy, Belgium and Japan, the speaker of Iran's parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani, said he is reluctant to allow a visit.

He contended that during previous visits by foreigners the captives "leaked" information used in the aborted U.S. rescue effort in April, Japan's Kyodo news service reported from Tehran.

Rafsanjani told the envoys Iran hoped to have better relations with their governments, but added: "It is our understanding that the U.S. superpower influences these countries."

Dutch Ambassador Willi Campagne, speaking for the delegation, said the seizure of the hostages and the U.S. embassy in Tehran Nov. 4 violated international law and asked Rafsanjani to try to get the Americans freed.

Rafsanjani said he will discuss the matter with parliament.

This was the same position he took Thursday when he met with ambassadors from eight Western states who appealed for help in getting the hostages released.

The appeals appear to be part of the new diplomatic initiative to get the Americans freed. The campaign was announced a week ago by State Secretary Edmund Muskie.

Blunt bows to howls, quits British Academy

LONDON (AP) — Self-confessed spy Anthony Blunt has resigned from the British Academy after four leading members quit in protest over his continued presence in Britain's top academic institution for the arts.

In a statement published Monday, Blunt, 73, an eminent art historian and former art adviser to the Queen, said: "Resignation seemed the only way by which I could lessen the dissension which my continued membership has caused."

The move is the latest mark of public disgrace for Blunt, stripped of his knighthood last November after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons he spied for the Soviet Union during the Second World War.

Sir Kenneth Dover, president of the 460-member academy said: "Professor Blunt believes, and I think he is probably right, that if he resigns, then a number of other people who are uncomfortable will not resign. Less damage will be done to the academy than by staying."

Blunt, an academy member for 30 years, said only two weeks ago he would not quit, but apparently changed his mind after a personal letter from Sir Kenneth.

Blunt confessed in 1964. But he was not publicly exposed and was given immunity from prosecution in exchange for information on three other British spies who fled to the Soviet Union, Donald Maclean, Kim Philby and Guy Burgess. Burgess died in 1963.

Port blockade lifted for day

CHERBOURG (AP) — Striking French fishermen decided today to lift their blockade of this northern coast port until midnight as a humanitarian gesture toward almost 6,000 British travellers, many of them women and children, stranded by the dispute.

Air France and British Airways also announced a special Paris-London fare of $68 U.S. in an effort to help vacationers with ferry boat tickets get home.

Talks aimed at halting the strike, which is beginning to hurt France's international trade, were due to start later today in Caen between representatives of the trawler owners and the fishermen, protesting planned layoffs and lower prices for their catch.

The strike has spread to other ports on France's Atlantic coast and in the Mediterranean where Sete, a major harbor west of Marseille with heavy traffic to north Africa, was closed in the morning.

But fishermen on the island of Corsica, who went on strike in solidarity with their fellow workers in Normandy Monday, ended their action after a day, permitting ships to sail to and from Nice and other mainland ports

Transport Minister Joel Le Thule said in a radio interview the French government does not intend to let the situation, which erupted during the weekend, get worse.

But he made it clear in another statement that giving in to some of the fishermen's demands would violate the terms of France's membership in the Common Market.

Observer okay

LONDON (AP) — The Observer, Britain's oldest Sunday newspaper rescued from closure when 25 members of a print union gave way in a pay confrontation, set up "procedures" Monday to withdraw dismissal notices sent to its 1,000 staffers, a management spokesman said.

The action by the print workers represented a victory for the American owners of the 189-year-old newspaper, saved from financial collapse four years ago by oil millionaire Robert Anderson's Atlantic Richfield Co.

Although a management spokesman struck a cautious note Monday, saying only that "procedures are in hand" to withdraw the dismissal notices, the immediate future of The Observer appeared assured.

Mugabe cohort released on bail

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Zimbabwe Manpower Minister Edgar Tekere, a black cabinet member charged with murdering a white farmer, was released on bail today after Prime Minister Robert Mugabe pledged to ensure that he would not evade trial.

Tekere was charged 13 days ago with the Aug. 4 murder of farmer Gerald Adams, 68, and had been in custody since then.

S.A. right-wing feared mounting terror campaign

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — The bombing of a South African university professor's office over the weekend has prompted fears of a right-wing terror campaign against advocates of racial change in this white-ruled country.

A homemade time bomb went off Friday night at the University of Pretoria office of Jan Lombard, head of the economics department and an adviser to Prime Minister P. W. Botha on plans to give non-whites limited political powers in autonomous regions. He was not in his office at the time of the blast and no one was injured.

The bombing coincided with the disclosure by another Botha adviser, Prof. Nic Wiehahn, that he and his family began receiving death threats soon after last year's publication of a government-commissioned report on labor reform.

The 14-member Wiehahn Commission recommended abolition of laws that enforce racial segregation and discrimination on the job.

Botha has been moving cautiously toward giving non-whites a political voice in autonomous regions, and his Botha's plans have encountered stiff opposition from the ultra-conservatives, the so-called verkramptes, on the right wing of the ruling National party.

No arrests have been made in connection with the death threats or the bombing of Lombard's office. But police and media suspicion focused on diehard Afrikaans-speaking whites who oppose any government moves to ease restrictions on the non-white majority.

Police Brig.-Gen. Hennie Du Plessis, in charge of investigating the Lombard blast, said Monday his men are working "in a specific direction . . . In any event, I do not think it was the action of any left-wing organization."

The Afrikaans-language news media tend to support the theory that ultra-conservatives are responsible for the bombing.

"The frightening possibility exists that the bomb attack on the office of Prof. Jan Lombard is part of an extreme right-wing Afrikaner terror campaign against enlightened Afrikaners arguing for change," the newspaper Rapport said Sunday.

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — The money was everywhere. Rare bills in mattresses, silver certificates under heaps of trash, old coins under piles of broken furniture that reached to the ceilings of the old woman's dilapidated house.

"It was like a dream," said the woman's court-appointed guardian. "They kept finding veins of cash. It's like a gold mine."

Helen Rennard, 80, had been evicted from her house near downtown Akron. She even spent a night in jail. Now officials know why she didn't want to leave home.

The money has a face value of about $50,000, and the rare bills, certificates and coins may boost that figure. It is being held in trust for Mrs. Rennard, who is at the County Falls nursing home in Cuyahoga Falls.

She had not told Scott Gordon, her guardian, about the money, nor did she know how much cash was in the house. She said she hid it because she feared a neighbor would steal it. "I guess I forgot where it was," she said from the nursing home.

Akron health department officials condemned the dilapidated house last month, and it was being torn down today.

Rennard, once a housekeeper for many of Akron's wealthiest families, was cited for health code violations and given a choice between jail and the hospital, where she could be treated for a skin disease. At first she chose jail.

After one night, she was transferred to Akron City Hospital and later was released to live in the home of a friend. She was taken to the nursing home Thursday.

The woman has two daughters and a son, but has had little contact with them, Gordon said.

Gordon turned up five account books, with a total of $24,000 on deposit.

Then Gordon began searching the house. "It was like Christmas," he said.

Many of the bills were out-of-circulation, oversized bills in denominations of $20 and $10 not printed since 1914, said Don Waldron, a bank vice-president.

Billygate sells suds

Washington Post

Billy Beer, the Edsel of brew that fizzled out two years ago after Billy Carter briefly promoted it, is making a comeback as a collector's item.

"Since Billy's been back in the headlines, it's going like crazy," said Steve Gerachis, manager of Press Liquors here in Washington. The store, two blocks from the White House, has sold 85 cases of the suds in the past week. Seventy of those cases were sold to a Seattle bar that had claimed to have a corner on the Pacific market.

F.X. McRory's Whiskey Bar in Seattle is selling the beer for $2 a can, with profits going to a local charity. Gerachis has upped his price for a six-pack from $3.99 to $6.36. "A can could be worth $10 soon," McRory said.

Liquor store salesmen said the sudden interest in Billy Beer coincided with the recent revelations that the president's younger brother had accepted a $220,000 loan from Libya.

In 1978, with sales slipping, Billy Beer died a quiet death, while other liquor store owners were glad to be rid of the cans gathering dust on their shelves, Steve Gerachis bought up the last 500 cases from the local distributor and stored them in the basement.

"We figured it would be worth something someday," he said.

Althugh Gerachis said the beer is probably stale by now, the can has, indeed, become a collector's item.

Island rebels mopped up

PORT VILA (Reuter) — Soldiers from Papua-New Guinea and Vanuatu police arrested about 50 people today on the rebel South Pacific island of Espiritu Santo, a government spokesman said. At least 28 of those arrested were described as secessionist rebels and a Vanuatu spokesman said the rebellion has been crushed.

Spokesman John Beasant said the 50 were arrested on five vessels stopped separately by a Papua-New Guinea patrol boat, at roadblocks and while looting a store in Luganville, the main town of the rebel island.

He said 28 of those arrested by riot police backed up by Papua-New Guinean infantrymen were brought to jail in this capital of newly independent Vanuatu, formerly the New Hebrides.

Beasant would not say whether those arrested were rebel leaders. He told a news conference: "You can reliably assume there will be more arrests."

But a senior Papua-New Guinean officer, Lt.-Col. Ian Glanville, told reporters the 28 brought to Port Vila are "hardcore" rebels.

They included four French citizens, said police aboard the military aircraft that flew them to Port Vila.

The roundup came within 24 hours of the Papua-New Guinean soldiers' landing on Santo to replace an Anglo-French security force. The Anglo-French force had not acted against the rebels.

Beasant said his government's riot police "could have done this a long time ago but the British and French military would not back them up."

"This absurd bubble (the rebellion) has now been burst."

He added: "There have been sarcastic remarks about the Papua-New Guineans but they have done in 48 hours what the metropolitan powers (Britain and France) failed to do and that will not be forgotten."

Meanwhile, British amd French soldiers here prepared to leave later today, ending their countries' involvement in this beautiful archipelago which they ruled for 74 years until July 30 in a confused system of dual administration.

Millions flee flooding

DACCA, Pakistan (AP) — As many as five million people in this impoverished Asian country have been displaced by flooding caused by monsoon rains in the states of West Bengal, Assam, Sikkim and Bihar in neighboring India, officials said today.

They said 18 deaths have been reported so far in the Sirajganj region of Pabna, where the Jamuna River is rising rapidly.

The country's other major river systems were also expected to continue rising.

308 CARDS OF THANKS

I wish to express my sincere thanks and appreciation to the many wonderful friends for their acts of kindness, messages of sympathy, cards, flowers and donations during the illness and subsequent loss of my dear friend Mona Milrose. My gratitude to Dr. Scott Wallace and the nursing staff of the Out-Patient Department of the Victoria General Hospital and also nurses and homemakers of the Home Care Nursing who were so supportive.

My thanks also to Reverend Will Robson who gave such a magnificent memorial service. — Alice Drew.

We wish to thank the many friends and relations who were so kind, sent sympathy cards and donations to the cancer fund. Special thanks to Drs. T. A. M. Peet and Dr. Banks, the nursing staff on the third floor of the Victoria General Hospital, also the nurses from the community health centre who were so helpful during the sickness and loss of a dear husband and father. — Mrs. Daisy McFarlane and family.

WE WOULD LIKE TO EXpress our deep appreciation to all the many relatives and friends who gave their support and love in the recent loss of our beloved Mother and good friend Isobel Henson. Thank you for all the many flowers and cards, your kindness will always be remembered.

309 IN MEMORIAM

WARREN, Voilet Evelyn - Loving and kind in all her ways,
Upright and just, to the end of her days;
Sincere and true, in her heart and mind,
Beautiful memories, she left behind.

PRECIOUS MEMORIES.
Grace, Meta, Etta, and Kay

SOVENKO-Ruth Doreen, August 19, 1977.
Her loving face I hope to see again,
Though the days have passed away;
Sleep on, dear wife, and take your rest,
They miss you most who loved you best.
Sunshine passes, shadows fall,
Love's remembrance outlasts all;
And though the years be many or few,
They are filled with remembrance, dear of you.
Sadly missed by her husband Matt, daughter Debra, son Peter Jr., George Christie, father, brothers Gerald, Gordon and Donald and sister Jean all of Montreal, also by her mother-in-law, Mrs. Pauline Holak and sister-in-law, Phyllis Herbert, both of Victoria.

Caribou threatened by hunters

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — The most serious threat to survival of northern caribou herds may be posed by native hunters, not pipelines or resource development.

Doug Heard, chief caribou biologist for the territorial wildlife service, said population statistics show a sharp decline in two herds in the southeastern portion of the Territories.

The Beverly herd numbered 160,000 in 1974, but now contains about 100,000 animals. The Kaminuriak herd has fallen from more than 100,000 in 1950 to 44,000.

Heard said government action is needed to control hunting.

He said there is little doubt native hunters are responsible for the continued decline because, other than natural factors (such as animals killed by wolves or natural causes), there are no significant pressures on the two herds.

In the last 50 years, the efficiency of native hunters has improved incredibly, he said.

"They have aircraft, skidoos and high-powered rifles. The killing power is phenomenal."

In the State of Alaska, where caribou populations have staged dramatic comebacks in the last several years, wildlife managers do not hesitate to cite native hunting restrictions as the reason for the turnaround.

garden notes
by helen chesnut

By far the best time to seed new lawns, at least in most parts of our own country and in the northern U.S. is the fall. The primary reason for this timing is that in northern areas, the ground is warm in the fall while it is cold in the spring.

Also, it is during the fall that natural moisture is more likely to help you keep that seedbed dampened — a condition without which you cannot hope for successful germination of your grass seed. Properly planted and treated, a fall-sown lawn will give you a fine established lawn by early summer the following year.

The first lawns on this continent probably got started with forage seeds falling accidentally by the wayside in the times of the first European settlers. Then, as early pioneers cleared patches of woods for their settlements and homes, they had to find a way to escape the resulting muddy conditions.

As time passed and the intensity of the struggle just to survive gave way to the happy phenomenon of odd bits of leisure time, people began to look for a place to lay that was soft and clean. Anyone who had moved into a newly-built home can readily identify with the need for a clean outdoor area.

A year ago we bought a home that was just being finished. The spot for the house was hacked out of a thick forest and before we could even dig the ground we had to have one of those big machines that can penetrate hardpan and lift out roots to go over the site several times. Then we had to go over the area to pick out all the rocks and roots before we could even begin to arrange things for lawn seeding.

In the meantime, I was having fits as the dirt and mud gradually found easy paths into the house with its brand new carpets. It was enough to turn any homemaker into a shrew. It also served as a powerful motivation to accelerate our pace to get the job done hastily.

However, we know well from past experience that no phase of seeding a new lawn was more important than the preparation of the site. Before digging and raking, all rocks, building materials and roots must be removed. Decaying woody material beneath the surface of your lawn can give you a lot of trouble later as they serve as a food source for mushrooms. It's easier to get rid of the woody stuff at this stage than to have to pull up the lawn later to remove the organic matter.

And if you balk at spending precious time how to clean up the soil for your lawn site, think of the time you might have to spend at the hospital waiting for your toddler's (or someone else's) tummy to be pumped put after they have stuffed into some of those mushrooms of unknown type.

Now that I've convinced you to go over the site carefully and clean it up before its final digging, let's go on to the next stage. The area should be as deeply dug as possible, for best penetration of grass roots. As a general rule, the deeper the roots the sturdier and stronger the lawn.

The next step is the raking of the site. Here is where you shape the contour of your lawn. Aim for a slight sloping away from the house for correct drainage and in coastal areas with our heavier annual rainfalls, this is crucial. One hears horror stories of home owners tiring of mowing their lawns and removing the turf to lay gravel in its place. Sometimes the result is disaster, often in the form of a few inches of water in the basement.

If the ground is dry, periodic soaking and drying will help the soil to settle, but once the raking is complete it's worth your while to rent or borrow a roller to go over the site. This will reveal any pockets or humps which can be corrected with additional raking. Then you roll it again, making any further corrections now for it will be too late once the grass is sown unless your new lawn undergoes major corrective surgery.

Lastly, a light raking should be given to the soil surface so it will be adequately prepared for the grass seed and fertilizer particles which you will be distributing.

There are a number of practical considerations in the choosing of lawn seed and fertilizers which I'll be pointing out in tomorrow's column before going into directions for their use.

Youth parliament abolishes the senate

OTTAWA (CP) — The young politicians running the Youth Parliament of Canada accomplished Monday what their real-life counterparts have hinted for years they might do — endorse a bill abolishing the Senate and guaranteeing French language and education rights.

Introduced by Montreal university student Peter MacArthur, minister of intergovernmental affairs, the bill would replace the Senate with two other bodies — one with provincial representation and the other with an equal number of francophones and anglophones.

The legislation — Towards a Culturally Autonomous Quebec in a Dualistic Canada — also guarantees language and education rights for French-Canadians. For instance, provinces in which five per cent of the population is French-speaking would have to provide eduation in that language.

The bill passed second reading — approval in principle — by one vote during the fourth sitting of the Youth Parliament of Canada after the Speaker cast the deciding vote.

Under its terms, the Senate would be replaced by a federal council, half of whose members would be French-speaking and half English. It would consider all legislation from the Commons dealing with cultural, education and language issues.

Truth Centre proposal cold-shouldered

If the Victoria Truth Centre wants to demolish its century-old historic building on Fort Street it better come up with a more sympathetic design for the modern replacement church.

That was the message left with Rev. Emma Smiley and architect Daryl Jensen Monday after they failed to convince city council's heritage advisory committee of the need to demolish Pentrelew, the old Crease mansion at 1201 Fort.

Ald. Bill McElroy told the delegation the only choice for the committee now is to endorse demolition and see the stark new church built or to protect the historic house by designating it heritage, which prohibits any exterior changes.

The heritage committee and city council probably would not hesitate to choose the latter, he said. If the Truth Centre drafted some more suitable designs for the city to see, then permission to demolish might be forthcoming.

Smiley promised that the beautiful three acres of grounds would be kept inviolate and the church would never build along the Fort frontage — although it has the right to put up apartments there.

"Here is a beautiful free park," she said.

She also repeated previous arguments that there have been so many changes to Pentrelew, the mansion built by Sir Henry Pelling Perew Crease, B.C.'s first lawyer and attorney-general, that it isn't worth designating as heritage.

She considered that the house was "demolished" in 1946 and 1947, when it was sold at auction for $13,000 and the Truth Centre removed third storey dormers, a tower and stuccoed the exterior.

"It's been changed a bit," McElroy acknowledged.

Committee chairman Terry Reksten, who went through the building last week with Smiley, said interior partitions have been cleared away to make room for the congregation.

Committee member John Keay said the changes were made 30 years ago with some sensitivity by a recognized architect, and enough remains of the original building to merit preservation.

Keay also said the committee was not in the business of mandating reproductions of heritage style buildings.

"I'd rather see a good new building than a mediocre semi-antique."

Stuart Stark said the house and its original owner are extremely well-documented in photographs, corresponence and printed material.

Smiley said the Truth Centre has to keep up with the times. To attract young people it needs a modern, forward-looking building. If the church is "heritaged" than the church will sell the property and move elsewhere, she said.

No decision was made at the meeting. Jensen said he will meet again with his clients to discuss the design of the new church.

Co-op to fight cable takeover

Capital Cable Co-operative today announced a two-pronged attack to overturn the recent CRTC decision allowing the takeover of Victoria and Vancouver cable TV systems by an eastern company.

General manager Herschel Hardin told a press conference the CCC will appeal to the federal cabinet to overturn the CRTC's approval of a $90 million deal by Canadian Cablesystems Ltd. to buy Premier Cablevision of Vancouver, which also owns Victoria Cablevision.

The citizens' group also will ask the House of Commons committee on communications and culture to investigate irregularities and stonewalling by the CRTC over the issue of competitive hearings for cable licences.

Hardin said the CRTC refuses to face the issue of cable companies trafficking in public licences and profiting from the sale of what are a publicly-regulated monopolies.

Canadian Cablesystems admitted it was paying $61.6 million to Premier over and above what the company's physical assets — the hardware of buildings and plant — were actually worth just for the licence, Hardin said.

The company called it a purchase discrepancy in the CRTC hearings last May but Hardin said this was in fact the price of the licence to operate the cable systems in the two cities.

"That licence is not their property. It's the property of the public," he added.

Hardin also said the CRTC and the federal Department of Communications have dragged out a promised study of the issue of allowing competitive licence hearings.

When cable companies are sold or when licences come up for renewal, other organizations should be allowed to apply for the licences, Hardin said.

A study of this issue was promised in 1977 by then communications minister Jeanne Sauve, after CCC lost a court battle on the matter.

For two years, nothing was done. In February last year, there was an indication an independent study was to be done by Philip Slayton, dean of law at University of Western Ontario, and communications consultant Robert Babe.

CCC kept prodding the DoC and learned early this year that a draft had been prepared and was circulating at the CRTC.

Hardin said he asked at the May CRTC hearings in Vancouver what had happened to the study and was told by a commission staffer that it was "buried in the bowels of the commission."

Capital Cable still hasn't seen a copy, although it has been promised one by the end of August.

"The CRTC just won't properly deal with the matter. The study to us was extremely important," Hardin said.

'Heritage' tax rebates now attracting many

Victoria's heritage designation program is so successful the city is faced with the problem of trying to cut down the numbers of houses designated — and the owners who get three years worth of tax rebates.

Begun amid much opposition from property owners, the program now has several applications a month for designation. Already the city is spending more than $70,000 a year on the rebate program.

"We're getting loads of requests from owners who want their homes designated," Terry Reksten, chairman of council's heritage advisory committee, said Monday.

There is some concern that the city won't be able to support the program financially. It isn't known exactly how much it is costing, although planner Brian Sikstrom said it was between $70,000 and $100,000 a year in lost taxes.

"I don't think council as a whole is aware of the dilemma," said Ald. Bill McElroy, the aldrmanic representative on the committee, which passes judgment on heritage designation applications before sending them to council for a vote.

"It's really a problem," said Reksten. "It's nice to have this kind of a problem, but it's still a problem."

Members set up a subcommittee of McElroy, Sikstrom and Reksten to come up with guidelines for designating houses.

Troops mass in Polish strike

With portrait of Pope John Paul II on fence, Polish workers hold mass outside Gdansk shipyard

Gdansk unrest spreads despite gov't appeals

Times News Services

GDANSK — The Polish government is massing troops on the outskirts of strike-paralysed Gdansk today to counter the unrest that has spread to some 200 factories and shipyards in the vital Baltic industrial region.

The workers pressed ahead with their campaign despite reports that troops were being prepared against them. However, Lech Walesa, leader of the strike committee, said the strikers wanted to reopen talks with the government and their demands were "of course" subject to concessions by the workers, once the talks began.

Walesa said the strikers would insist the government recognize the strike committee as the bargaining agent for all of the more than 100,000 striking workers.

The strikers seemed unconcerned about reports that large forces of troops had been brought to the outskirts of Gdansk, where riots 10 years ago brought down the government. None of the workers dispatched on routine missions from strike headquarters in the Lenin Shipyards reported seeing any unusual concentration of troops.

Asked if he would order preparations in the event of any military move against the strikers, strike leader Walesa said, "I don't believe in violence."

Poland's President Henryk Jablonski was in Gdansk heading a group of top-level officials meeting to consider the strikers demands, a sweeping 25-point list of political reforms, wage increases and other economic benefits.

Despite Jablonski's plea for "all honest workers" to oppose the leaders of the strike, the number of factories and shipyards joining the walkout grew to 170, and 24 more groups of workers waited to register with the joint strike committee as the work stoppage spread to five more towns in the region.

Gdansk radio broadcast official warnings that the situation in the Baltic province had reached "worrying proportions." A navy commander, the provincial trade union chief and the head of the provinces food co-operative said they felt law and order in the region had broken down.

Although the workers were talking of possible modifications of their demands, they said they were not reacting to Communist Party leader Edward Gierek's emotional appeal for all workers to return to their jobs.

Dissident sources Monday reported that coal miners at three large mines in Silesia, Poland's other major industrial area in the centre of the nation, had formed strike committees.

The strikes started after the government raised the price of meat by 40 to 60 per cent on July 1.

The workers' latest 25 demands, which the strikers approved early Monday, were a combination of economic requests and demands for far-reaching political reforms, including freedom of speech and religion. One of the workers' requests last week was freedom to join their own unions.

Behind the political demands being made by Polish strikers that threaten traditional Communist forms of control lie economic problems with no solution in sight.

Poland has been living beyond its economic means for years. It is now so deeply in debt to foreign banks that it cannot borrow enough to modernize its economy and thus have some hope of economic growth. But workers refuse to accept the bitter medicine of reduced living standards while basic reforms are made.

Unions target imported beer

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. beer shortage will become a full-scale drought following announcement Monday that locked-out brewery workers and their trade union allies will block shipments of imported suds in an effort to force a new contract settlement.

The move, to take effect at midnight Thursday, is designed by union officials to apply pressure on provincial Labor Minister Jack Heinrich for an end to a lockout of 1,200 employees by B.C.'s three major breweries.

The Brewery, Winery and Distillery Workers' Union has asked for government action to help resolve the dispute but management of Carling O'Keefe, Labatt's and Molson's have so far rejected renewed contract talks and Heinrich has been deaf to union pleas.

The brewery union and the B.C. Government Employees' Union, representing employees of the Liquor Distribution Branch announced Monday that it will try to stop shipment of all beer from the U.S., offshore and from other provinces.

The action might include pickets at border crossings or a refusal by warehouse and liquor store clerks to handle imported beer.

Meanwhile, despite the lockout, now into its fourth week, beer-barren British Columbians have been making do largely with stockpiled suds or imports from the U.S.

Tavern-keepers and beer-store owners in Washington state towns near the border are reporting mixed responses from Canadians to the labor dispute.

In Blaine, Wash., south of Vancouver, they're saying business is not likely to pick up until beer supplies run out in B.C., and they estimate that will not happen for some time yet.

"There's too much beer around," said a BCGEU spokesman. "In fact there's tons of it around. No one is suffering."

But at Sumas, Wash., southeast of Vancouver, businessmen report long lineups at the border as British Columbians swoop over the border to pick up cases of 24 selling at $10.50 to $11 a dozen, plus a $2.75 a dozen duty.

The two unions say the B.C. liquor branch has reneged on an agreement to limit shipments of imported beer into the province.

A decision to allow licensed outlets up to 90 cases a week of imported beer is helping breweries to minimize the impact of the dispute, said BCGEU general secretary John Fryer.

A liquor branch spokesman said Washington distributors had originally promised 500,000 cases a week would be destined for B.C., but the amount is actually about 300,000 cases.

While some Vancouver-area pubs have been laying off workers because of the strike, some are actually hiring staff to sell off stocks bought up before the labor dispute began.

In Sumas, Dick Bromley, manager of the community's only supermarket, says he has cleared the store's warehouse of all commodities and is using it solely for beer.

"We wheel it in one door and out the other," he said. "This is an unexpected bonanza that we would welcome every year."

No evidence nitrites cause cancer: study

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government said today that based on an extensive review of scientific evidence there is no need to order a ban on sodium nitrite as a food additive on grounds it may cause cancer.

Nitrite, used as a preservative in bacon, ham and many other meat and poultry products, was cited in a 1978 study by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a possible cause of cancer, based on tests among 2,000 laboratory rats.

In a joint statement, the Food and Drug Administration and the agriculture department said the MIT study was reviewed by a group of independent pathologists who found "a much lower incidence" of lymph cancers among laboratory rats than was originally reported.

The statement was attributed to Jere Goyan, FDA commissioner, and Carol Tucker Foreman, an assistant secretary of agriculture who oversees food and consumer services in USDA.

Meat industry officials, farm groups and others have questioned methods used in the MIT study and have pressured the government not to ban nitrite until further evidence could be reviewed.

C. Manly Molpus, president of the American Meat Institute, hailed the findings "as no surprise" among those who have critizied the 1978 MIT report, including the Council on Agricultural Science and Technology, members of Congress, the U.S. General Accounting Office and the Library of Congress.

Molpus, whose organization is financed by the meat industry, said: "The American consumer is the real beneficiary" of the government's announcement on nitrite.

The MIT study was conducted by Paul Newberne, a leading expert in the field of nutrition-induced disease, under contract with the FDA.

After Newberne's report was released, the FDA and the agriculture department "reached the tentative conclusion that nitrite might cause cancer" and considered steps that would lead to its ban as a food additive.

The government agencies, under pressure from farm groups and others who were skeptical of the MIT study, also set up a review process to go over the scientific information and come up with a determination.

Further, it said, a committee of scientists from federal agencies — including the FDA, the agriculture department, the National Cancer Institute and the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences — reviewed the pathologists' findings.

The committee "concluded that insufficient evidence exists to support a conclusion that nitrite induced cancer in the rats, based on the MIT study," said the statement.

However, it said federal agencies will continue efforts to eliminate "preformed nitrosamines" from foods. Those are chemicals formed when nitrite combines with naturally-occurring substances known as amines.

Israelis raid into Lebanon

BEIRUT (AP) — Israeli officials claimed today that between 40 and 50 Palestinian guerrillas were killed in an overnight attack by helicopter-borne Israeli commandos against Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon. The Tel Aviv officials said three Israeli soldiers were killed.

The Palestine Liberation Organization reported only 12 dead and 14 wounded among its fighters, while Lebanese provincial authorities put the PLO death toll at 20, with 25 other guerrillas wounded.

It was the biggest Israeli raid on Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon in 2½ years.

Both Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and PLO chief Yasser Arafat inspected opposite sides of the border battlefield, coming within a few kilometres of each other.

Lebanese authorities said the raids against four Palestinian strongholds touched off an artillary battle between Israeli-backed Lebanese Christian forces and PLO guerrillas at Beaufort Castle, an ancient fort built by French Crusaders about eight kilometres north of the Israeli border.

The clifftop fortress has been used as a Palestinian artillery platform.

Lebanese officials said the Christian forces advanced on the castle after four Israeli military planes attacked the ancient fortification with rockets and bombs.

Arafat claimed his forces repelled the assault.

Lebanon protested against the raid to the U.N. Security Council and U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim issued a statement "deploring" the violence.

In Washington, the State Department did not specifically condemn Israel but said it was "deeply concerned over the rising tensions and violence in the area . . . and we call on all sides to use maximum restraint."

Trains hit head on, 62 dead

WARSAW (AP) — Sixty-two passengers were killed and "many others" injured today when a freight train passed a red warning light and slammed head-on into a passenger train outside Torun in northern Poland, the official Polish news agency PAP reported.

PAP said the engineer "probably was asleep" and missed a red warning light. The crash occurred at about 4 a.m. local time.

The locomotive and first two cars of the passenger train were severely damaged, the agency said. It said the train left Bydgoszcz shortly before the accident and was bound for the central Polish city of Lodz.

The report gave no specific number of injured.

Torun is 160 kilometres south of Gdansk, the centre of a growing strike that has pitted some 100,000 workers against the regime of Communist party leader Edward Gierek.

Dublin bomb blast

DUBLIN (UPI) — The Irish Republican Army, for the first time in its history, launched a major bombing attack on public facilities inside Ireland today, destroying six buses and causing $1 million worth of damage.

Police said six of the 15 buses parked inside a depot of the Irish state transport company in Dublin were destroyed and several of the undamaged vehicles were painted with political slogans.

No one was injured, but officials estimated the damage at about $1 million.

Police said the IRA was responsible for the attack, which investigators said was the first of its kind inside the Irish Republic.

Ferry subsidy too high, says report

The subsidy paid by the provincial government to the B.C. Ferry Corp. is completely divorced from the realities of operating a ferry system, says a confidential draft report prepared for the legislature's Crown corporation's committee.

The interim report, prepared by committee staff and currently being discussed behind closed doors, says the subsidy must be changed.

The subsidy — a per-mile sum based on the equivalent amount of money needed to maintain the same length of highway — last year amounted to $49.5 million and allowed the corporation to show a net income of $15.5 million for the year despite an operating loss of $37.4 million.

The report says that while the current formula is simple and from the corporation's viewpoint quarantees a fixed sum each year for which no proof of need is required, there are a number of actual or potential vices.

"It rewards the corporation disproportionately for long routes, whether or not such routes are justified and regardless of the volume of traffic carried, it may inhibit the corporation's ability to obtain approval for fare increases . . . and it may encourage the corporation to make less than wise business decisions," the report says.

"One of the anomalies of the current subsidy formula is that it is throwing more funds than necessary into the corporation today and may continue to do so for several years."

The report notes that while the corporation's longest route — Port Hardy to Prince Rupert — accounts for less than half of one per cent of total system traffic, it generates 64 per cent of the subsidy.

The report says the subsidy makes little or no allowance for changes from year to year in either operating costs or capital needs.

"Initial subsidy payments may have been overgenerous as implied by the corporation's healthy bank account."

The report says the committee is concerned that the implications of the subsidy formula could influence and distort the corporation's decision-making process, including possibly adding longer routes without regard for traffic demand or total cost.

There are no specific changes recommended in the report. However, it is
